Chief's Notes:

September 29, 2014

In my profession, I try and keep an open mind. I realize there are always two sides to every story and every person has the right to see and understand the facts as they personally interpret them based on individual values. I have friends and relatives that I know use marijuana. Do I police them? No – at least not until they violate the law; hurt someone else; or engage in activity that creates a need to.

I was in Anchorage last week and had the opportunity to break from a conference to attend the Marijuana Initiative meeting. Ironically, the conference was about community engagement and substance abuse efforts. Up until this point, I had a vague understanding of the issues surrounding this initiative. After taking a closer look this initiative, I have some serious concerns.

The first of which is that, if the initiative is passed, the legislature has very limited ability to change any provision that would alter the intent. In effect, the wording of the initiative stands. If passed, the State has only nine months to draft regulations and put in place the processes necessary to administer the sale and distribution of marijuana. In a State as immense as ours, I can foresee problems; the least of which may be that each subdivision of the State (cities) will also have to figure out how to deal with this in nine months or less. This includes the City of Nome.

The second is the use of the word 'reasonable' in several sections of the initiative – particularly when referring to advertising for the various establishments that will sell the varieties of products that have emerged, including marijuana infused foods and candies, marijuana for smoking and concentrates of marijuana. The use of the word 'reasonable' leaves the issue up for interpretation and, in the legal world, this means additional hearings, possible court cases, time and public money that will be spent determining what is 'reasonable' and what is not. The initiative is written to allow the greatest degree of permissiveness rather than to closely define conduct and use.

The third issue is the wording that allows for not only the legalized use of leafy or bud marijuana, but also marijuana concentrates. Though there are some leafy marijuana products that contain fairly high levels of THC, concentrates can be distilled, through a highly volatile process, to levels of 90% THC. This is very potent and will have predictable affects. I found in my time in law enforcement that substances in higher potency are dangerous and, at times, lethal. Do you want this legally available in your community?

The fourth issue is that the 'local option' - which means that any organized area may 'opt out' of the legalization if it is passed - is really not local option. Unlike the local options available for alcohol, even if municipalities exercised the maximum control allowed by the initiative, it would still be legal for anyone to import marijuana into the city, to possess marijuana, to give marijuana to others, and to grow marijuana as long as not for commercial purposes. This would also not prohibit the possession or distillation of concentrates.

The initiative is vague and unclear in what defines an organized area as villages and tribal entities are not specifically noted. This is a problem as it diminishes the voice of rural Alaskans, and I can only assume that since this initiative was proposed by urban residents, rural Alaska was a second thought. It appears rural Alaska wasn't important enough to consider.

From a purely legislative side, this initiative leaves many holes to be filled. It does not provide the clarity of purpose and definition that would warrant passage of an initiative that will affect every Alaska resident – all 637,000 of us, whether living in the city, a town or village.

The meeting in Anchorage started me thinking. The behaviors I witnessed made me embarrassed that adults could act so rude and unprofessional. I watched as one attorney (pro side) interrogated another person in a manner that was disrespectful, aggressive, and demoralizing. The same person ignored the Lt. Governor when he attempted to curb his aggressive personal attacks; and ignored the Lt. Governor who tried to let him know his time was up. This same individual came back to his seat to 'high-five' his associates like it was a football game and his team just scored. And this same individual heckled nearly every person who stood to make a comment that didn't agree with his platform. It was

There were proponents that were well spoken and presented their case. I can embrace that marijuana has therapeutic value for many with chronic conditions that require pain or stress management. To these persons, I extend my thanks for helping me to understand their needs. However, rather than legalizing marijuana for recreational use, why not have a discussion about changing the law to help those with a legitimate need to have greater access and fulfill what is missing from the medical marijuana law; such as dispensaries where the marijuana can be easily obtained? Why not discuss reclassifying how the medical community looks at marijuana and allow prescribed use for conditions where it can be therapeutic? Why not look at alternatives?

Marijuana has been used by people for a long time. It will continue to be used regardless of whether it is 'legalized' for public sale. Is it safe? I don't know as I can only refer to my own experiences and the information that I read. I have seen people that are so 'stoned' that they can't answer simple questions; have impaired physical abilities; and are unable to remember what they did while under the influence of marijuana. I have encountered people who are driving while smoking marijuana and who are just as impaired as the person intoxicated from alcohol. I know people who had no ambition in life to do anything but get high, because the compulsion to do so was so great. I have seen people who are such heavy users of marijuana that they become psychotic, paranoid, mentally ill and unable to function. I know of people who have been driven into a fit of despair and committed suicide after 'burning out' from using extensive amounts of marijuana. And I have known people who were unable to function unless they were high. Based on my personal and professional experiences, marijuana is not any 'safer' than alcohol.

In fact, to choose between the two substances leaves no good choice; and to choose both is an obvious bad choice.

Any substance, if used responsibly, can be beneficial to our people. However, the track record for responsible use is not particularly inspiring.

Alaska has the highest rate of substance abuse in the nation. It has the highest rates of domestic violence and sexual crimes in the nation. These two things are directly connected. I have published information regarding the correlation between alcohol and arrests. Those findings support that the use of alcohol contributes to 80% or more of all arrests in our community. This week it was 100%. Marijuana has many of the same physiological effects as alcohol; decreased inhibitions; impaired decision making; impaired coordination; and an altered mental state. Adding another 'legal' substance to the mix, will only compound the issues we are currently facing in Alaska continued on page 22

There is conjecture that legalizing marijuana will reduce the demand for alcohol. However the simple, facts are that many people who use marijuana also use alcohol at the same time. Sales of alcohol have not diminished in the States where marijuana has been legalized. It is also supported by the number of DUI arrests and contacts which result in the seizure of marijuana and/or marijuana pipes. People are using both at the same time – not one or the other but in combination. Not particularly scientific, but illustrates the

in as revenue. This pales in comparison with the amount of money to be made by those who will cultivate and sell marijuana – some of who are aggressively pushing this issue forward. Nobody has talked about how much legalization will COST us - as the money from the State doesn't come to us. There will be costs to our community that the citizens whether you use marijuana or not will have to pay for. Ask yourself a few simple questions:

Who is to gain?

Those who desire to use marijuana and those who are pre-positioned to turn this opportunity into personal profit.

Who is to profit?

Those who will turn the marijuana industry into big business in Alaska, reaping millions in profits and diverting monies away from other needs

What is to gain?

A greater level of dependence and substance abuse in the State, with the highest impacts in rural Alaska.

The attorney from Kenai made it clear: he wants marijuana legalized because he wants to get high and doesn't want to fear being, 'locked away in a cage like a rat'. That's it. My question to you is, 'is it worth it?' And, is this something that is right for all Alaskans, not just those who either want to consume marijuana or make money as a commercial enterprise, but for all of us AND for the right reasons.

He also made the comment that 'this is Alaska. Since when do we take a backseat to Colorado and

Washington in privacy, freedom, liberty and the right to be left alone?' I had to think...this is Alaska....since when did we care what they do in Washington and Colorado? Is this single issue the defining limit between privacy, freedom, liberty and the right to be left alone? This sounds more like anarchy than the agreement of a people with their govern-

Since coming to Nome, I have worked with many people to try and reduce substance abuse in our community, realizing that rural Alaskan's have completely different needs than urban areas. We have worked towards reducing the impacts of substance abuse on our community.

This issue is divisive. I am not against marijuana because I'm a police officer and am supposed to be against anything the government says is bad. I'm against marijuana legalization because I can see it contributing to the destruction of lives; the injury to people; and an increase in the substance abuse that has afflicted so many residents of this state. I don't want to see anyone else get hurt by increasing the access and availability of any drug, including marijuana; or to add to an already staggering level of alcohol and drug abuse in our state. I have seen the effects. Many families are living with the effects. Let's all take a closer look at this issue.

Making it legal doesn't make it any better or reduce the effects.

Institute of the North's Week of the Arctic kicks off in Nome

By Diana Haecker

The Institute of the North's Week of the Arctic kicked off in Nome on Monday, Oct. 6 for two days of public listening sessions, workshops and information sharing forums. Central discussions revolved around Arctic climate change and its ramifications. Topics ranged from how to deal with increased Arctic maritime traffic and resource development to ideas for bringing living standards of rural, coastal Alaska citizens closer to those enjoyed by residents of

It was noted that people living in the Arctic are mainly focused on surviving increasingly difficult conditions due to changes in weather and how those changes impact their land, water and the animals they depend on. People who live and work further south tend to see only the opportunities that may arise with "the changing" Arctic.

Triggered by an increased state and federal focus on the Arctic, the urban Alaska and the rest of the Institute of the North organized this series of events. According to the ION's website, the Week of the Arctic will serve as a "platform for community leaders, experts and interested stakeholders to learn about the Arctic while contributing to a growing list of priorities and perspectives."

The first event was a closed door government roundtable - accessible by invitation only - that brought

In Tuesday's municipal elections no surprises emerged after the polls closed at 8 p.m.

Two Common Council seats, two Utility Board seats and two School Board seats were up for election and none of the seats saw any competition to incumbent candidates.

School Board candidate Brandy Arrington ran for School Board seat A, after Barb Nickels decided not to run for re-election. Charles Pullock began a write-in campaign, but did not prevail as Arrington - according to unofficial, preliminary results won the seat with 306 votes, while 175 voters wrote in a candidate. After polls closed, officials were not yet able to say how many write-ins were in the name of Charles Pullock.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's Small Business Initiative program awarded a total of $105,000 to four regional entrepreneurs at a ceremony on Wednesday, October 1.

Following two days of presentations and interviews, grants went to a car dealership in Nome, an ecotourism company based out of Teller and Nome, a repair shop in Brevig Mission and a café in Gambell.

The recipients have two years to implement their business plans and utilize the available funding.

In its short history, NSEDC has allocated a total of $750,000 to the SBI program, awarding 36 recipients throughout the Norton Sound region.

In 2014, 21 proposals were received. An independent panel of judges narrowed down the applicants to six finalists who gave live presentations during the final evaluation process this week.

"Having a knowledgeable and returning panel of judges, independent of NSEDC, is one of the keys to the success of the Small Business Initiative," said NSEDC's Community Benefits Director Paul Ivanoff III.

The 2014 judges included Merle Apassingok of Gambell, Mark Vink and Annabelle Cunningham of Unalakleet, David Olson and Donna James of Nome.

The judges are responsible for narrowing down the field of applicants to the finalists, and then allocating the available program funding among those chosen for grant

Ivanoff also applauded those who put in the hard work to submit proposals for this year's competition. 'Of course, the program would not be a success without the strong proposals we receive every year from Norton Sound residents," he said. "Not only does this program fall directly in line with our mission of providing economic development, it

By Nome Police Chief John Papasodora

I believe I can feel snow in the air.... With the coming of winter we will have extended periods of darkness, slippery roads, and inclement weather.

Please do the following:

- Make sure your children have reflective clothing and stripping on their clothes/packs. As an adult, wear reflective clothing if you are planning to be out walking.
- SLOW DOWN. Leave early and give yourself plenty of time to reach your destination. Arrive safe and insure that those around you stay safe. The vast majority of collisions are caused by people being in too much of a hurry and/or not paying attention.
- Make sure ALL of your lights are working properly. It is easier to avoid a hazard if you can see it. It is also easier for others to see you. PRE-VENT an incident by being visible.

- Clear off your window so you have a full field of sight. Remember there are many hazards that are low to the ground. Being able to see these will prevent injury and damage.
- · Check your tires. Lack of tread depth can cause your vehicle to skid or slide.
- SLOW DOWN WHERE PEDES-TRIANS may be present. This includes school zones; areas of dense pedestrians traffic (like around Hansen's Grocery); or at times when pedestrians may be out and about (when schools release or at bar break). REMEMBER that we will be having periods of darkness when visibility is limited. Many people also wear dark clothing which will make pedestrians harder to see.

• DON'T DRINK and DRIVE. Reduced visibility; increased darkness; and alcohol are a bad combination. Help improve our community safety by taking a cab.

As Permanent Fund money comes into the community, make efforts to safeguard yourself and your property.

• If you are going out drinking, DO NOT take large sums of money with you. While intoxicated, many people have lost or given away large sums on Sept. 1, 1906.

of money. You may also make yourself an attractive victim for theft.

- Make sure your doors are locked and your property secure. They are people in our community who will steal your property if it is not secure. Don't make it easy.
- Remove the keys from your vehicle, ATV and snow machines. We have had a rash of small vehicle thefts. Secure your vehicle(s) and prevent the loss of your property.
- Don't leave valuable items visible in your vehicle. This makes an attractive target for thieves.
- · Secure your property in a locked shed to reduce temptation to those who would take it, and to keep your property out of sight.
- Take an inventory of your valuables. Take pictures. If your property is taken, serial numbers and photos are a valuable tool for investigation.

It takes a community working together to keep a community safe. Please report any suspicious activity to the Nome Police Department at 443-5262 or by calling the CRIME-LINE at 443-8509.

Labs confirm low oxygen as culprit of salmon die-off

The US Fish and Wildlife Service on Tuesday issued an update regarding a mysterious massive fish die-off at the Kobuk River. Thousands of chum salmon died suddenly in mid-August in a large portion of the Kobuk River and its tributaries.

The Alaska Department of Fish & Game's Fish Pathology Lab in Anchorage thoroughly examined the salmon carcass from the upper Kobuk River. They dissected the fish and did lab cultures for disease. They found no bacteria, viruses, infections, or other disease in the fish or its organs. There were no abnormalities were observed during the fish dissection. A variety of algae was found on the fish's gills and skin, indicating high algae levels in the water.

Low dissolved oxygen was the most likely cause of death.

With no evidence of disease in the fish, a "perfect storm" of environmental conditions was likely the cause of the salmon dieoff. This year's record return of chum salmon combined with warm, sunny weather in August could have been enough to reduce the level of oxygen in the water to cause the die-off. Warmer water holds less oxygen than colder water.) An algae bloom might have further depleted the water's oxygen. Because rain helps to mix river water and replenish oxygen, the dry spell in mid-August also might have contributed to oxygen depletion. There is no reason to be concerned about the safety of eating salmon that were harvested and put away for the winter, experts say.

The Institute of Marine Science at UAF examined the water samples that were collected near Kiana. The lab reported that if there had been an algae bloom it is long gone. There was very little living material in the four samples.

Samples were collected a few days after the salmon die-off and apparently were too late to be of value. With fish kills, water samples must be collected promptly to identify algae blooms and "low dissolved oxygen." Local residents are the best "first responders" when water sampling is needed in an unexpected event like this.

A recent NOAA climate report on Alaska's summer found that the average August temperature for Kotzebue this year was 58.4° F, which is the third warmest August on record for Kotzebue, surpassed only by 1977 and 2004. Similar data were not available for Kiana or the upper Kobuk, but it's generally significantly hotter inland than along the coast in Kotzebue. This long spell of warm, sunny weather is one piece of the puzzle in the salmon die-off.

BLM announces November NPR-A Oil & Gas lease sale

The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) announced last week that it will hold an oil and gas lease sale for the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska (NPR-A) on Wednesday, November 19, in Anchorage.

The lease sale, the fourth since the President directed the Secretary of the Interior in 2011 to conduct annual oil and gas lease sales in the NPR-A, includes 270 tracts that cover about 3 million acres. The Notice of Sale will be published in tomorrow's Federal Register.

"The November sale is in line with the Administration's commitment to expand domestic energy production," said BLM Director Neil Kornze, who attended and opened last year's NPR-A sale. "The BLM has taken a balanced approach to development in the NPR-A to ensure that future production is done safely and responsibly while protecting the subsistence resources of Alaska Natives and the habitat of worldclass wildlife populations.'

Since 1999, nine previous lease sales have generated more than $263 million. Currently, 207 authorized leases cover more than 1.75 million acres. Tracts available for lease are consistent with the NPR-A Integrated Activity Plan finalized in February 2013.

The BLM, which sought public input on tract nominations for lands in the NPR-A planning areas that are not currently leased or deferred from leasing, made its selections based on an evaluation of the comments received; natural resource information; resource potential; industry interest; and subsistence values. The comment period ran from June 3, 2014, through July 18, 2014.

To date, only exploratory drilling has occurred within the NPR-A. ConocoPhillips Alaska, Inc., currently is pursuing a rightof-way grant and related authorizations to support development of petroleum resources at the Greater Mooses Tooth Unit. This project would facilitate the first production of oil from federal lands within the

Federal Subsistence Board recruits for Regional Advisory Councils

The Federal Subsistence Board is accepting applications through January 23, 2015 to fill seats on the 10 Subsistence Regional Advisory Councils. Council membership appointments are typically 3-year terms. There are approximately 35 seats open for appointment among all Councils. On the Seward Peninsula Subsistence Regional Advisory Council, terms ending by the end of this year are seats held by Reggie Barr (Brevig Mission), by Fred Eningowuk (Shishmaref) and by Scott Lockwood (St. Michael).

The Councils meet at least twice a year and provide critical advice to the Federal Subsistence Board on subsistence management issues.

Council meetings serve as a forum for regional public involvement in Federal subsistence management. Council members must be knowledgeable about the uses of fish and wildlife resources in their region.

The application form and information about the application process and the Subsistence Regional Advisory Councils is available on the Federal Subsistence Management Program's website: www.doi.gov/subsistence/index.cf leaders from regional profit and nonprofit Native Corporations, state legislators and co-management groups together at the Kawerak board room.

Afterward, the ION moved to City Council Chambers where the public was invited to hear an update on the work of the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission and to accept public testimony. An illustrious group of people crowded Council chambers. Present were several Alaska Arctic Policy Commissioners including Rep. Bryce Edgmon (D-Dillingham), U.S. Coast Guard ex officio member Jamie Robinson, Nome Mayor Denise Michels, Stefanie Moreland from the Governor's office and others as were federal heavy-weights Special Representative for the Arctic Admiral Robert Papp and federal Special Advisor on Arctic Science and Policy Fran Ulmer.

In the audience were Representative Neal Foster, Washington State Senator Kevin Ranker, ocean policy framers, energy experts from the UAF Alaska Center for Energy and Power director Gwen Holdman, Bering Strait Alliance LLC executive director Art Ivanoff and Coast Guard 17th district Rear Admiral Daniel B. Abel.

Alaska Arctic Policy Commission's executive director Nikoosh Carlo summarized the status of work done by the commission.

The commission has produced a preliminary report, a proposed bill and an implementation plan with several strategic recommendations. The final report and bill proposal will be presented to the legislature in January, 2015 The four main strategic recommendations include addressing the lack of infrastructure in the Alaskan Arctic, strengthening an Alaskan science and research agenda; supporting and creating healthy communities; and promoting economic development with the caveat to respond to Arctic culture, society and the unique environment.

"We ask for public input and comments on the implementation plan now," said Carlo.

"We are looking for your critical eye. What are we missing, what can you suggest? We are limited in the time. On January 30, 2015 we have to deliver an Alaska Arctic Policy bill to the legislature." Bryce Edgemon, one of six legislators on the panel, also encouraged public involvement. "We encourage you to bring your comments to us, even if they are just small stories about how things have changed in your region. Please bring your stories to us," he said.

Fran Ulmer commented that she was impressed with the width and breadth of sharing. Ulmer said it is time for Alaska to focus on the expectations, dreams, and hopes of Alaskans regarding the changing

Midnight Sun Motors

Sonja Callahan's car dealership will focus on delivering high-quality vehicles to the people of the Norton Sound region at an affordable price.

Midnight Sun Motors will specialize in vehicles with all-wheel and four-wheel drive, offering residents access to low-mileage and well-maintained trucks, cars and SUVs.

While primarily operating out of Nome, she hopes to expand and work with other communities in the region.

Opiq Adventures

Dora Hughes' adventure and ecotourism business will provide highend tours to give people from around the globe deep experiences in nature, focusing on the traditional Alaska Native culture and heritage.

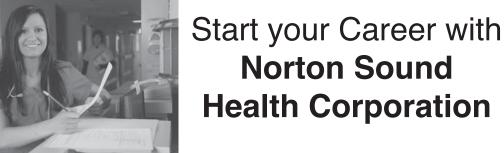

Based out of Nome and branching out on the Nome highway system, Opiq Adventures will focus on nonconsumptive recreation including wildlife viewing, photography, hiking, observing local culture and birding. "Opiq" means snowy owl in Inupiaq.

D&K Shop

Eddie Tocktoo's repair shop will be based in Brevig Mission, but will also serve Shishmaref, Wales and Teller. Focusing on repairing small engines and appliances, the shop will also offer rental space for those in need of a warm place to do their own repair work. Eddie has experience working on small engines and 13 years of experience maintaining residential appliances.

Waam's Café

Troy Apatiki and Erika Apatiki are an uncle and niece duo. Their family-owned café and coffee shop will be based in Gambell, providing snacks, beverages and gaming, along with espresso coffee. Without local restaurants or a teen center, Troy and Erika hope Waam's Café products and services will benefit the residents of their community.

times we're living in. She emphasized how important it is that Alaskans take positive steps to educate the rest of the nation on its misconceptions and misperceptions about the Arctic, to paint a clear picture of our reality and our challenges because so many elected officials outside of Alaska have a hard time comprehending life in rural Alaska. "It is remarkable that Alaska has this Commission where people are talking with each other about this," Ulmer said.

ION Executive Director and AAPC member Nils Andreassen commented, "My biggest fear is – and I believe it will happen – is that we cannot address everything." He cited time constrains and fiscal realities that will limit the scope of the end product. However, he added, he is comforted by the thought that this is just the first step towards forming an Alaska Arctic Policy. "The same with the National Arctic Strategy, which is also just the first step," he said.

Public testimony

Public testimony began with Nome resident Chuck Wheeler. He cautioned that, instead of focusing on the development of non-renewable resources, the priority should be to protect, preserve and enhance renewable resources. Wheeler said he is critical of the proposed land transfer at Port Clarence from the Coast Guard via the public landholder BLM to the Bering Strait Native Corporation. BSNC conducted a feasibility study to determine whether or not port infrastructure at Port Clarence would be commercially viable. The study determined that it would, but only if oil and gas developments would go forward at the outer continental shelf. Wheeler was concerned that the impacts of the development would have negative impacts on the region, rich in fish, marine mammals and other natural resources. He also pointed to the lack of infrastructure in place that would help swift responses to tanker accidents or oil spills. "What happens when an LNG tanker collides with a Red Dog tanker? We not only have 20 to 30 dead seamen, but also millions of gallons of oil spilled. The nearest Coast Guard station is in Kodiak. We're a long ways from a solution," Wheeler said.

Vice President of Kawerak's Natural Resources Division Rose Fosdick brought the commission up to speed on the recently held two-day workshop titled "Bering Strait Voices on Shipping". Kawerak invited two representatives — one representing the tribe, one the municipal government — from 16 communities around Nome to gather ideas to meet head-on the challenge of increased shipping by identifying concerns and possible solutions. The biggest concern is for the integrity and health of the land, sea and subsistence. Fosdick listed issues, such as waste dumping at sea, pollution, the threat to a continuation of the subsistence culture, and the ability to be effective first responders as items topping a very long list of concerns.

She said a report is scheduled to be delivered next month. Fran Ulmer suggested the report be finalized and submitted prior to the AAPC's next meeting in November.

Energy

Addressing the strategic recommendation to reduce power and heating costs in rural Alaskan Arctic communities, UAF Alaska Center for Energy and Power director Gwen Holdman challenged the Commission to recognize that energy and its cost lies at the heart of everything the Commission is trying to accomplish.

"Energy is an issue that will underline any of the goals you seek to address," Holdman said. "The role of affordable energy in Alaska has been underplayed. I am surprised, for example, that the operational cost of a deep draft port at Port Clarence has not been discussed."

She said that Alaska energy experts and academia are at the fore-front of energy solutions that could apply not only Alaska-wide or Arctic-wide but could have nationwide ramifications. Holdman informed the commission that there are 12 microgrids working in Alaska currently partly run by renewable energy. She was talking about the Power Systems Integration Program.

Those microgrids in smaller communities optimize diesel-renewable hybrid energy systems because the economy of scale does not apply at all to most rural Alaskan village energy systems. "My challenge to you is to understand how our systems are performing that we installed," she continued on page 6

Power outage leaves city in the dark

By Diana Haecker

A power outage in the early morning hours of Monday, Oct. 6 left Nomeites eating breakfast by candlelight. Nome Joint Utility System manager John Handeland said in an email that the culprit of the blackout was the failure of a mechanical rubber coupling on the engine cooling system. The leak caused the coolant to spew out. "This resulted in the generator shutting itself down, sensing it was overheating," Handeland said. The outage was systemwide and lasted for about 45 minutes. "It took us a little bit to warm up another generator before we could restore things," said Handeland in the email.

Power to the city was restored around 7:30 a.m.

said. It is common, she said, that those hybrid systems can turn off diesel generators and run on renewables for a period of time.

"Are we offsetting diesel fuel? Yes, but it might not always translate into savings for the individual household, not yet," she said. "Energy is going to be a huge part of developing, maintaining and operating the infrastructure. I hope we all look at it in a more organized fashion and work on it not only for Alaska but nationwide," Holdman said.

As an indication that Arctic issues go beyond Alaska's borders, Laura Cantral with the Meridian Institute introduced herself and the Joint Ocean Commission Initiative. In 2005, former commissioners from the US Commission on Ocean Policy and the Pew Oceans Commission established the Joint Ocean Commission Initiative. The Meridian Institute has served as secretariat for the joint initiative, dubbed JOCI. JOCI has created a broad-based, bipartisan effort to catalyze ocean policy reforms and action at the national, regional, state, and local levels. Early on, Cantral said, the US Commission on Ocean policy identified the Arctic as a vital region. Over the next two years, JOCI officials will hold meetings in Alaska to learn of the issues and will focus on Arctic policy issues.

Art Ivanoff with BSA LLC commented on the need for education and what he calls "capacity building." He said the opportunities that may arise out of infrastructure development and natural resources development must go to a skilled workforce. "There is a need to educate our people so that the jobs at the Slope go to us. We need to tool up and add additional resources so that our kids fill those positions. I stress the need for tooling up," Ivanoff said. For example, he said, just recently the Coast Guard met with him and other residents in Gambell and visited the schools to talk to students about possible careers in the Coast Guard. "We need to show the youth that the opportunities are there. Just providing the kids with some insight could ignite a spark that leads to a career.

He urged the commission to add more substance to the fourth recommendation, which deals with economic development in the Arctic.

The AAPC will meet again in November 16 and 17 in Anchorage to finalize the report and draft a final bill to present to the Alaska Legislature by the end of January 2015.

The Week of the Arctic continued with a panel discussion on "CDQ, Fisheries Infrastructure and Lessons learned," a young leaders round table, a panel on Maritime Operations, Prevention and Ocean Observations for Navigation Safety and a federal listening session followed by an all day Arctic issues workshop titled "Built Infrastructure and Human Capital."

The Week of the Arctic continued in Kotzebue and Barrow.

Harbormaster Lucas Stotts reports the following activity at the Port of Nome and the small boat harbor. On Sept. 30, Northland's tug and barge Polar Ranger/ Westward Trader arrived with freight. This was the last main line barge from Northland of the 2014 season. On Oct. 1, Crowley and Alaska Logistics vessels had to wait offshore for weather to calm down before they could come into the harbor in order to discharge fuel and freight.

On Oct. 2, Crowley's tug and barge Nachik/165-2 discharge fuel at the east dock. Alaska Logistics tug and barge SeaHawk/Madison Rose arrived to discharge freight. They departed for the last village freight run of the season.

On Oct. 3, Crowley's Nachik offloaded fuel trucks. The vessel departed on Oct. 4 for the season. On Oct. 5, the tanker Themestern anchored in Nome's roadstead to refuel a barge. On Oct. 6, harbor staff removed the floating docks from the water for the winter season as ice is forming in the harbor. On Oct. 7, the Canadian Coast Guard icebreaker Sir Wilfrid Laurier anchored offshore to conduct a crew change. The vessel's draft is too deep to come to the dock. 6:15 p.m.. Flight 155 will depart Nome for Kotzebue at 7 p.m. and arrive there at 7:43 p.m. Flight 155 will leave Kotzebue at 8:34 p.m. and arrive in Anchorage at 9.56 p.m..

The flight departure times for Wednesday through Monday will be later than at present. Currently, flight 151 leaves Anchorage at 10:20 a.m. Beginning Nov. 2, flight 151 will

Nome Public Schools Annual Child Find Notice 2014-15

All children have the ability to learn. Each one has unique strengths and challenges. Some learn faster. Some have different needs due to problems with seeing, hearing, talking, moving, or simply dealing with people. This notice is to inform you and the community about the right to, and availability of, educational services for all children with disabilities.

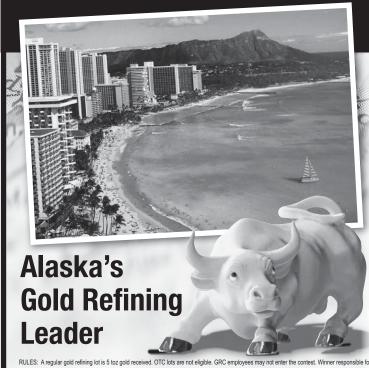

Nome Public School District is required by federal and state law (34 CFR 300.220.34 CFR 300.121) to conduct an annual 'Child Find' effort as a means to locate, identify, and evaluate every student between the ages of 3 and 21 with a suspected disability within its jurisdiction.

Disabilities that qualify for Special Education services include: autism, deafness, deaf-blindness, early childhood developmental delay, emotional disturbance, hearing impairment, specific learning disability, cognitive impairment, orthopedic impairment, speech or language impairment, traumatic brain injury, visual impairment, or any combination of these, which has or might be expected to interfere with a child's educational performance. Not all children referred for assessment qualify for special education services.

Children who are found eligible are entitled to a free and appropriate education, including specially designed instruction tailored to meet his or her unique needs. Any information regarding a child is treated in a confidential manner as required by state and federal law.

If you suspect that your child or a child you know may need to be identified in any of the areas listed, and the child is not currently receiving Special Education services, please contact:

Hoogendorn brothers lead Nanooks at the state cross country running championships

By Keith Conger

The 2014 Nome-Beltz crosscountry running team concluded its season by sending 11 runners to the state championships at Bartlett High School in Anchorage last weekend.

By virtue of their victory over Barrow, Kotzebue and the rest of the Region 1 North competition the prior week, the Nanooks boys team was able to send a full squad of seven runners to the Anchorage event.

Overall, the boys placed 8th out of 13 teams in the 1A, 2A, and 3A division that included runners and teams from smaller schools around the

Many members of the Nanooks team were well acquainted with the course, having run at the ASC Invitational there the first week of the season in August. Sophomore cocaptain Wilson Hoogendorn used knowledge of the trail to improve his personal record by 35 seconds. His time of 18 minutes, eight seconds earned him 24th place out of 129 runners. He found himself a full 60 places ahead of his finish at state last Nanook co-captain Oliver Hoogendorn was hurt earlier in the season. Hoogendorn, who finished the race in a time of 19:03 was the second Nanook across the line, and 58th overall.

To illustrate that every second does count, freshman Harrison Moore finished the race just eight seconds after Hoogendorn, but also eight places behind him. The young Nanook runner ran his first state championships in a time of 19:11.

Moore was able to shave a whopping 1 minute 34 seconds off his previous time on the course.

Although the Nanooks girls did not qualify as a team, they did have four runners gain eligibility by placing in the top 10 at the regional meet last week.

The Lady Nanooks were paced by junior Christine Buffas' 42nd place finish. She was followed by Ivory Okleasik and Mary Fiskeaux who were running the race course for the first time. They finished the race 58th and 59th out of 113 runners, in times of 23:17, and 23:19 respec-

Sophomore Bianca Trowbridge showed the most improvement on the course this year by running the race in 23:55. This time was an impressive 1 minute 48 seconds faster that her time on August 22nd, and landed her the 74th spot.

First year head coach Crystal Tobuk was excited by the great accomplishments of the young Nanooks runners. The boys team will be returning five out of the seven from its state qualifying crew. All four of the girls running at this state meet will return next season.

Hoogendorn set a great example for his teammates this year with his dedication to off-season training. Tobuk knows that the results next year will be even greater if more of the runners follow his lead by training before the season.

Tobuk was pleased to hear lots of the runners already talking about how they will train after the season. "It's great to cross train," said Tobuk. "Some of the kids plan to join the ski

The Nanooks certainly have a coach that walks the talk when it comes to year-round training. Tobuk is scheduled to compete in the Rock and Roll marathon in St. Louis, Missouri on October 19 and the Honolulu Marathon in December.

Regional Runners

Region 1 North was paced by a pair of Barrow runners. Pavel Hernandez finished 11th in the boys division with a time of 17:30. Alaina Wolgemuth cracked the top ten by running the girl's division race in a time of 20:34.

The Bering Strait School District had two runners qualify for the state championships. Jayden Wilson of Unalakleet placed 44th in the boys division race with a time of 18:43. Anikan Paniptchuk of Shaktoolik placed 85th in a time of 24:41.

Horner earns spot on UAF Women's Volleyball team

By Keith Conger

When Ariana Horner showed up at the Nome summer volleyball camp in June, she assumed she was there to help her former high school coach Lucas Frost support some of her former underclassman teammates. Fate, though, had a totally different plan in store for her.

Frost had invited the new University of Alaska - Fairbanks coach Mallory Larranaga to Nome to assist in running a camp aimed at getting Bering Straits region volleyball players some work on their skills. Larranaga, a former UAF All-American, helped run the three-day day camp. Along the way she noticed that Frost's helper was quite talented.

After the camp, the UAF coach approached Horner about the opportunity to play for the Division II (DII) Nanooks volleyball team. "She gave me her card," says Horner, and asked her to get in touch the next

ONCE A NANOOK, ALWAYS A NANOOK – This past summer Ariana Horner went from being a Nome-Beltz Nanooks volleyball player to being a UAF Nanooks volleyball player. This is the picture on the Nanooks' official media-guide website.

Frost said that is was amazing to see Horner hit the ball when she was being set by an NCAA collegiatelevel setter. The invitation showed how pleased Larranaga was with finding the energetic, rural diamondin-the-rough.

Horner, who had already accepted a music scholarship to attend Trinity Valley Community College in Athens Texas, was not sure if the offer to become a member of the UAF Nanooks team was real.

'I give a lot of credit to Mr. Frost," said Horner in a recent, midseason interview. "I was doubting it, but he said that she wouldn't be recruiting me if she didn't believe in Horner discussed the change in plans with her parents and then decided this was her destiny.

She accepted an offer to red-shirt her freshman year at UAF, meaning that during the first year of her college experience, Horner would be able to practice with the team, but not play in any matches. This common arrangement would allow her to still have four years of college playing eligibility after this season.

"Everything a girl in high school does in her junior and senior years is to get ready to compete at the DII level," said Horner, "I scrambled to get together in a month and a half".

Horner is very pleased that UAF has a top-notch music department. Not only is she playing volleyball and taking 17 credits of class work, but she has become a member of the Choir of the North, one of the longest standing choral organizations in the state of Alaska.

Impressing instructors seems to be a knack for this multi-talented young lady. After singing for one of the musical directors, she was placed directly in the choir, bypassing the usual audition process.

Horner is working hard to assimilate to the new volleyball adventure. In high school she played middle blocker, but she has been told by Larranaga that in the future she would play right side hitter. "I've never played it before," said Horner. "Mallory uses me everywhere. [In practice] I play wherever my coach needs

When the team is traveling, Horner, and three other red-shirt players, practice daily. Horner is taking advantage of these practices to get more reps and more individual time with one of the team's assis-

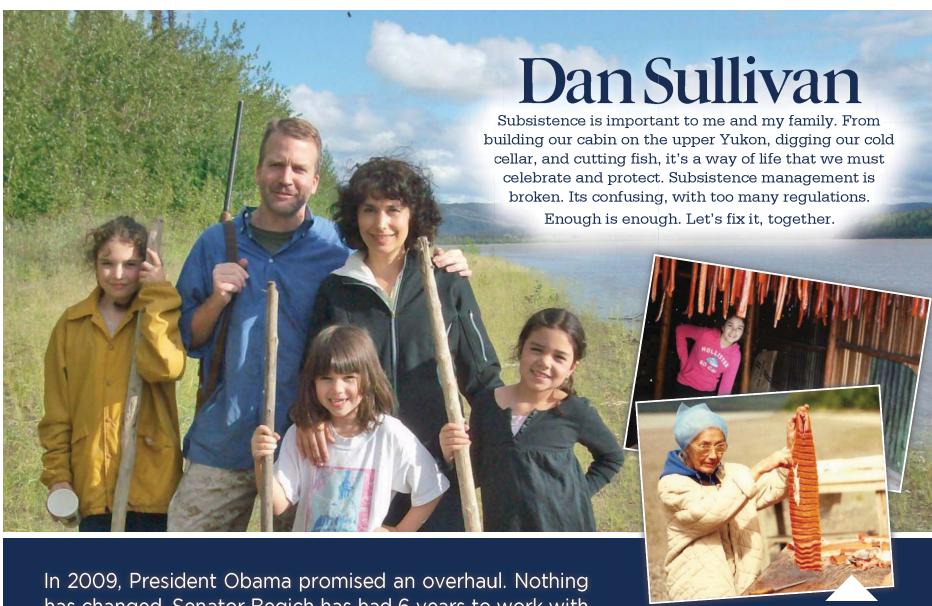

"I only played in season," said Horner in reference to the common occurrence of rural athletes playing in multiple sports. "The others (on the UAF team) played club volleyball all year long.

At home matches Horner and the other red-shirts don Nanook gear and cheer for the team. They are also asked to help as extra sets of eyes for the women on the court.

Horner is making the most of her amazing opportunities, and has even found a way to blend her studies with her sports. She has already sung the National Anthem before four home volleyball matches.

THE 2014 UAF NANOOKS WOMENS VOLLEYBALL TEAM - This July, 2014 Nome-Beltz graduate Ariana Horner accepted a spot on the University of Alaska - Fairbanks Nanooks volleyball team. She is practicing hard and spending the first year of her collegiate volleyball career as a red-shirt freshman. Horner (14) and her teammates won both of their matches this past weekend in Fairbanks.

Failure - The First Step to Suc-

Sidney saw an ad in the newspaper, inviting anyone who thought they had acting ability to come to an audition. Sydney was hungry and out of work. He thought to himself. I've tried dishwashers wanted, porters wanted and janitors wanted . . . . why not actors wanted?

Many responded to the ad and came to the theater, bad actors as well as good. The stage was filled with actors. When the director arrived, he caught sight of Sydney and gave him a try out. One minute was all the director needed to know that Sydney was not properly suited for the role of an actor. "My friend," he said "how is it you came here? You have no training as an actor, you can barely read, and your foreign accent is so thick, no one will be able to understand you?"

The director motioned to two stagehands who snatched the script from Sydney's hands, spun him around, and tossed him out the door. The director was seething and yelled at the top of his lungs, "Get out of here and stop wasting my time. Go get a job you can handle. Get yourself a job as a dishwasher or something.

Sydney wailed and ground his teeth. Although the director's words were harsh and unkind, Sydney realized that his life was going to be mighty grim unless he changed. Sydney began by learning to read, and even though he had no real desire to act, he next set about to learn acting. With practice and determination, Sydney finally landed a small part in a little play. One job led to another, and another, and another. Fifty-six movies and a lifetime later, Sidney Portier looks back to the day he was thrown out of his first audition as the day that changed his life for the bet-

When failure confronts us, it is easy to blame others and perhaps there are just reasons for finding fault in others. Failure can also help us to grow. In Sydney Poirtier's case it gave him the determination to excel as an actor.

Out of the failure of the crucifixion, Jesus rose to eternal life. In the depth of our own failures Christ is ready to lift us up to undreamed of heights. He recognizes that often times we truly need help to start down a new road. All sorts of opportunities come our way as we journey through life. Some lead us into closer relationship with God. Others do not. Even when we refuse God's invitation, God always issues another, inviting us to discover his ability to help us grow even when others put us down and tell us we have no po-

Give failure a chance. Grow and change. Commit yourselves to learning from failure and commit yourself to asking God for help. What steps must you take to change your future?

Donald Jay Douglas February 24, 1978 – September 13, 2014

Donald Jay Douglas was born to Clarence and Nora Douglas on February 24, 1978 in Nome, Alaska. He succumbed to a long term illness in the early morning hours of September 13, 2014 at the Alaska Native Medical Center in Anchorage with is sister Burlene and brother Lane by his side. He was 36 years old.

Donald was a very caring person who often opened up his home to people throughout the Bering Straits Region, giving them a place to stay while most were in Nome for medical appointments or meetings. Before moving to Nome in 2001, he lived most of his life in Koyuk and he loved spending much of his time out in the country. He enjoyed riding and racing snow machines in his younger years. He raced in the Nome-Golovin race in 2002 as well as several of the snow machine races put on by the City of Koyuk in celebration of the New year. He attended the Koyuk Elementary School, Nome Elementary School and the Koyuk High School up until his Sophomore year. He later went on to get his G.E.D through Kawerak in 2006. Donald enjoyed the company of his many friends and cousins and brother, Lane. He often kept in touch with them via phone on a daily basis before he became ill. His favorite phone pals were Darold Dewey and his brother, Lane Douglas. He referred to Darold as "Tripple D" and in return, Donald was known to many as "Double D". He was an avid movie watcher and would watch some of his favorites time after time and sometimes recite their lines and laugh about it. His favorite movie along with his mom's was the "Pink Panther", starring Steve Mar-

Lifetime Alaskan resident, Thomas L. Tungwenuk, Jr., 56, died Monday, September 29, 2014 in An-

Funeral Services were. Monday, October 6, at the Anchorage Funeral Home, Burial is to follow in the Nome Cemetery.

Thomas was born June 18, 1958 to Thomas and Alma (Oxereok) Tungwenuk, Sr. in Nome. He graduated from Unalakleet State High School in 1978 and has lived in many places including Nome, White Mountain, Wales, Koyuk, Scammon Bay, Unalakleet, and Savoonga, before finally settling in Anchorage. He enjoyed road trips, Eskimo singing and dancing, and carving. Some of the Native dolls that he made were sold to the Smithsonian Institute and Fairbanks Museum as well as other doll collectors. He also attended the First Presbyterian Church.

His family was quoted saying,

Thomas L. Tungwenuk, Jr.

'Thomas was easy to get along with. He grew up in many communities across western Alaska and had many friends who knew him as Nung. He volunteered whenever he could, and loved to help people. He would give friends rides whenever he could. He loved to drive between cities along the road system. Thomas loved his family, his grandchildren, friends and gatherings for potlucks or Eskimo dancing.'

Thomas was preceded in death by his parents, Thomas and Alma Tungwenuk, Sr.; and brothers, Reginald Tungwenuk, and Brian Tungwenuk.

He is survived by his significant other Elaine Kingeekuk of Anchorage; a brother, Bruce Tungwenuk of Nome: sisters, Betty Nicholson of Fairbanks, Lillian Katongan of Unalakleet, and Karen Baxter of Nome.

Arrangements were cared for by the Anchorage Funeral Home and Crematory.

This is a notice of unclaimed capital credits for members of record of Alaska Village Electric Cooperative (AVEC).

AVEC hereby now gives notice that capital credit payments are now and have been available since June 14, 2001 at the office of the Cooperative at 4831 Eagle Street Anchorage, Alaska 99503, to its members.

Thousands of checks and letters were returned as undeliverable or checks remain uncashed. This emphasizes the need for members to provide AVEC with a forwarding address when they leave the system - and to keep AVEC apprised of future address changes until all accumulated capital credits have been returned.

Even if their checks were returned as undeliverable or have not been cashed, former members or their estates may still claim their capital credits. AVEC's website contains a list of 3,248 members or former members who are still due capital credits. Please visit www.avec.org, click on the "Money For You" menu option and review this list for your name.

If your name appears on the list, or if you have information that may help AVEC locate someone listed, please fill out the online form and return it to:

Capital credits from these retirements which have not been claimed by April 30, 2015 will revert to Alaska Village Electric Cooperative. If you have questions, please call AVEC at 800-478-1818.

Samuelsons retire to enjoy life in Nome

By Diana Haecker

When Laura and Gary Samuelson simultaneously retired last week on Sept. 30, the couple didn't waste any time to begin enjoying their newlywon freedom Alaskan-style at their cabin in the Snake River Valley.

After all, they each came to Nome for adventure, according to Laura. After a long career in advertising, public relations, and spending the last 17 years as the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum director, Laura joined her husband in retirement.

Loving the land for what it is, the country for what it has to offer and the richness of its history and culture, this is still paradise for the Samuelsons.

Gary Samuelson retired from 32 years of being the area manager for GCI operations in Nome and Kotzebue.

Sitting at the kitchen table overlooking the Snake River mouth, the small boat harbor and their dog team lazing on their dog houses right underneath the windows, the Samuelsons have everything they came here for.

Born and raised in Helena, Montana, Gary was influenced by his grandfather's love for the outdoors.

He grew up reading the Alaska Sportsman Magazine, knowing that Alaska was his destiny. In the summer of 1977 Samuelson graduated from the Boise State University's Electrical Lineman program and on August 8, he and a high school friend headed for Alaska. "I landed in Nome with a guitar, a backpack and about 5 bucks," Samuelson wrote in a one-page biography. Right off the bat, Samuelson landed a job at Alaska Gold Company. "We lived at Camp 5, they gave us room and meals. At age 21, that was perfect," he said. He remembered working in Thaw Field 6, then as an oiler on Dredge #5 and spending the next three seasons working on the dredges, the last three seasons at the Alaska Gold power plant. Samuelson, for a couple of summers lived old miner style in a white wall tent – which can be now seen at the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum.

In 1980, he met his wife Laura "on the seawall" through a mutual friend. Laura arrived in Nome on March 13, 1980 just a few hours before that year's Iditarod winner Joe May. Laura came from Chicago, Illinois, where she held a high-powered job with an advertising agency, working on the 70th floor of a skyscraper. She just came to visit her brother, but immediately fell in love with Nome. When she left, it was only to quit her job, sell the condo and return to Nome to stay.

After seven gold mining seasons, Gary landed a job at Alaska Cablevision in 1982. Not long thereafter, when the previous area manager had to leave in a hurry, Samuelson became the boss and learned everything he needed to know in a quick briefing at the Polar Cub.

"John had to leave in haste and put the ten most important things down on a napkin. That's how I became the manager," Samuelson remembered laughing.

Back in the day, Nome had only a few channels: one was flip-card advertising and three were tape-delayed programming.

Samuelson explained that big bags filled with beta tapes recorded with shows would be sent from Kirkland, WA to Kodiak, where they were played for one week. Kodiak would send the tapes to Nome and they'd play here before being sent to Kotzebue, which received three-week old shows.

In 1996 GCI purchased Alaska Cablevision. From then on, Gary Samuelson was involved in adding internet, local and wireless phone service to the cable TV services, even allowing a live feed and locally originated channel that cablecast live public meetings from city hall and Northwest Campus as well as the "Meet the Candidates" forum before elections

That was work. But the Samuelsons also liked to play in the outdoors and Gary acquired a Siberian husky once he moved to Nome. He learned the art of sled dog driving with Charlie Johnson and Matthew Iya, Ray Lang and Matt Desalernos. The Samuelsons bought land in the Snake River Valley and began to build a cabin in 1985, where they spent much time and still do.

Traveling back and forth to their cabin, Gary mushed the dogs and Laura drove with the snowmachine.

When Gary found an old wagon trail heading north from the first bend of the Snake River past the airport runway, he began using and grooming this old trail for their frequent travels to their cabin. Today the trail is still known as "Samuelson's trail". Gary spent years hacking willows to continuously improve the trail, staking it with driftwood tripods and grooming it for smooth travels.

Soon enough Lang and Desalernos came Snake Valley way and a mushing trail system was established. The trail existed in its entirety until the DOT built the road to the now defunct Rock Creek Mine right on top of some sections of the trail north of the Teller Highway.

Thinking of the adventures they had, Laura Samuelson looked at her husband and said, "You really found your dream here." Gary nodded and said, "Yes, we did."

Both love dog mushing, the adventure of living in Nome and the involvement in the Iditarod. For years, Gary and Laura – in different capacities – welcomed Iditarod mushers to Nome. Long friendships with mushing legends like Susan Butcher, Joe Runyan and Jeff King contributed to the quality of the Samuelson's dog team as they were gifted with dogs from champion teams.

"We had good, strong teams," said

Gary. "One time I was coming up on Mike [Webber] and he just said, my team was like a freight train coming at him," said Gary. Today, with five dogs left, they, just like their masters, enjoy retirement and their freedom.

Samuelson looked at his dogs and said they taught him more than letting go of work stress or keeping him healthy and strong. "They taught me how to be a good manager," he said. "They taught me that you work as a unit, that they need a leader and that we all have to pull in the same direction."

Laura and Gary said they will remain in Nome for the time being. Just a few years ago, they finished building a nice house on Port Road. There, they see the gold dredges bobbing in the channel, the barges come and go with cargo, and a myriad of sea birds flocking to the estuary a few yards away from their porch. In the winter, the Snake River freezes and becomes the highway to go inland.

"For now, we're going to enjoy our cabin, going hunting, fishing and skijoring with our dogs," said Gary. "We will be enjoying the seasons like we haven't been able to do while we were working."

Bears break into camps

By Diana Haecker

Bears broke into several camps along the Nome and Snake River valleys last week. Jana Varrati and Ben Esch's camp along the Nome River was broken into and ransacked by a grizzly bear sometime on Wednesday night. Their neighbor, Kevin Fimon, alerted the couple that a big grizzly bear, judging by paw sizes on the door, had broken into the cabin and had torn the place apart getting to the dried survival foods left there in case a human needed shelter during the winter.

Steffen Straub's camp was broken into near mile 7 at the Glacier Creek Road in the Snake River Valley. Straub said it must have happened between Sept. 30 and Oct. 3. Straub went to check on the cabin and saw that the animal had pounced against the window shutters and had broken the shutters and the window. The bear then climbed into the cabin, rummaged around and left. There were paw prints on the table by the window, said Straub. "But the bear was courteous enough to hop over the railing instead of breaking it when he left." The bear left tufts of fur and a few drops of blood behind from stepping into broken glass. Straub estimates the damage to repair the front window and shutters at approximately $1,000.

More bear evidence was found on a truck parked overnight on Oct. 2 at mile 12 of the Glacier Creek road. Bear paw prints were found on the driver's door, hood and windows of the vehicle, but it was not damaged.

Don Young appears at Nome Common Council meeting

By Diana Haecker

Just as the Nome Common Council was updated on a federal issue relating to the City's appeal of the Federal Emergency Management Agency's refusal to reimburse Nome for repairs to the Cape Nome quarry dock, U.S. Rep. Don Young and three staffers walked into the Council Chambers, briefly causing a commotion in the listening audience.

Without missing a beat, the Council went on to address several points on the agenda – including the news that Nome is number 5 on the "safest places in Alaska" list, and then turned the podium over to the Congressman.

It's an election year, Young said, thus he has traveled to Nome to hear from folks and on Tuesday he would go on to visit Shishmaref and Kotzebue. Young told the Council that the worst thing that had happened to America was when Congress eliminating the so-called earmarks, appropriations doled out to specific projects. He vowed to bring back the earmark concept to Congress, saying that legislators have relinquished that power to the president and it should be taken back. "I believe that the legislature should have the right to designate federal dollars. You would not have your breakwater without it," Young stated.

Tom Sparks asked the Congressman about his thoughts regarding Arctic seaports and the possibility of an extended port for Nome and facilities at Port Clarence in particular. "I don't want to get in the middle of the battle where the port will be," responded Young. He said that there absolutely is the need for an Arctic deep draft port. While Nome has the infrastructure in place, it doesn't have the depth, which Port Clarence has. "It's very hard for me to convince Congress that we are an Arctic nation," he said. At the same time, he said, ExxonMobil and Rosneft made a major oil discovery in the Russian Arctic. China builds nuclear ice breakers and brings large tankers through the Bering Strait delivering LNG. "The Arctic is where the action is in the next 150 to 200 years," he stated. While it is not likely that more pipelines would be built, the main mode of transporting oil or crude would be via ship traffic. He suggested the nation better be involved in building ports, staging rescue equipment and getting ready for oil spills.

Young then pointed council to his staff and said not to hesitate to contact his office with comments or requests. The Congressman and his entourage then left the meeting.

The council moved on to vote for several amended budget ordinances closing out the fiscal year 2014. The budgets concerned the Nome General Fund (actual budget was $11.1

Plans for large graphite mine worry Teller and Brevig Mission

By Laurie McNicholas

Last summer Canada-based Graphite One Resources set up a camp on land off the Nome-Teller road to continue exploratory operations at its Graphite Creek prospect.

It is a large block of claims located north of Nome and east of Teller on the north flank of the Kigluaik Mountains, about one mile inland from intertidal waters at Windy Cove, a bay of the Imuruk Basin.

Teller Traditional Council President Wesley Okbaok said a helicopter flies crews and equipment to the camp from the Sinuk River.

Teller and Brevig Mission residents worry that the company's proposed development of a large graphite mine poses significant risks to their subsistence resources, Okbaok noted.

No Graphite One official has met with the communities.

Okbaok said Kawerak had asked Graphite One and the Dept. of Natural Resources to send representatives to a meeting conducted by a Kawerak board committee last June in

It was attended by Teller and Brevig Mission residents.

'Graphite One refused to come, and DNR sent Jack Kerin," Okbaok said. Kerin is a DNR natural resource manager.

Okbaok said Graphite One recently hired a consultant, Joy Huntington of Huntington Consulting, a Fairbanks public relations and communications firm. "She wanted to come to Teller and meet with the Teller tribe at our annual meeting, but Teller consists of two tribes-

At end of mining season. DNR commissioner visits Nome

By Diana Haecker

Just before the City's Common Council canvassed the results of last week's municipal elections in a special city council meeting on Thursday, Oct. 99 at noon, a surprise visitor took to the podium at the Council Chambers.

It was Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources Commissioner Joe Balash, who visited Nome for the day to address the city's grievances regarding the ever-growing offshore gold mining industry brought on by the DNR's 2011 offshore lease sale.

On the Web:

City Manager Josie Bahnke introduced Balash to the council. Bahnke said that the Commissioner came to Nome in response to a letter the City sent him three months ago.

Balash said he wanted to make sure that the City's input is considered in DNR decisions and that he was there to look at the impact of offshore mining activity in Nome. The purpose of his visit, he said, was to establish a dialog with the City as it comes to DNR permitting decisions.

Councilman Tom Sparks encouraged Balash to visit West Beach and notice the trash and human waste left by miners living on the beach. Balash said the state's jurisdiction only goes up to the median high water mark and that landowners are ultimately responsible for issues that happen on their land. "But we also want to be good neighbors," Balash quickly added.

Sparks suggested a full-time DNR position stationed in Nome year round, in light of DNR land disposals on the Seward Peninsula.

Councilman Stan Andersen didn't mince any words when he said, "You got over $9 million from the lease sale, can't you share a bit?"

Balash said the department does not have any formalized way to do so, but that he will look into a way to start the discussion on what could be

"Well, then, welcome to Nome," said Andersen. "Took you a couple years to come here.'

Balash acknowledged the grievances. "We can't do it alone. But there is more that we can do and do better," he said.

Addressing the request to chip in some money, Balash said in an email to the Nugget that the Legislature would have to be willing to make changes to statutes and then make appropriations to provide any sort of revenue-sharing from this specific activity. "We will continue to work with Rep. Foster to try and find workable solutions —but there isn't an easy answer to that particular issue," he wrote.

He also corrected the amount of revenue brought in by the 2011 lease sale. "What's often cited by the City when discussing this issue is the amount brought in at the lease sale. I think the revenues collected at the initial sale have been overstated, but the amount collected was substantial." he said. "Our numbers show the bonus bids to have reached somewhere close to $7 million rather than the figure cite often by residents." Balash said that 25 percent of the amount went into the Permanent Fund. "Of the remaining $5.125 million, $4 million was provided by the State of Alaska to the Port as part of the improvements included in the G.O. bond package in 2012. I think a fair argument can be made that we've already shared a substantial share with the City of Nome," he wrote in an email. City Manager Bahnke gave the Commissioner a tour of the Port of Nome and harbor facilities. She drove Balash and his staff to West Beach, showed him the shantytown consisting of ramshackle shelters made of driftwood, plastic tarps and other found materials. Dear Editor,

My mother was Katie John. Her name has become symbolic across the state of Alaska for her life-long legal battle to protect traditional rights. The state views her as a threat while her supporters view her as a hero. But to me, Katie John is simply "Mom," a warm and loving woman who took care of me and my numerous siblings making sure we were clothed, fed and kept warm. Katie John took on the state of Alaska for the right to take care and feed her family the only way she knew how - the same way her ancestors had survived and existed for thousands of years.

Katie's legal battles begin in 1987 after the State closed our family's upriver traditional fish camp that had existed and fed our family for centuries. I have many happy memories of summers spent preparing for the cold months ahead by gathering and hunting food in this small area. My mother's commitment to ensuring her children had a way to practice their traditional rights ran so deep that she spent the rest of her life in litigation against the State.

There were times that it seemed like my mother might finally win and be able to live the rest of her life in peace. But the State kept fighting her, even when the District Court ruled in her favor repeatedly. The final State official to sue was Dan Sullivan. When he was Attorney General in 2010 he dug up awful history by taking the case to the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Today, I can openly and honestly state that I am deeply uncomfortable with the reality that the man who reopened my mom's case could be Alaska's next Senator. Dan Sullivan litigated against our family's subsistence and traditional rights. It was misguided and wrong. Tony Knowles was in his same position at one time. Before making any bold decisions, he chose to visit our family's fish camp, meet my mother and learn about the core reason for The Katie John Case.

Dan Sullivan could have followed Tony Knowles' example. Instead, he chose to continue litigating against my mother, Katie John.

Dan Sullivan cannot represent Alaska and he cannot represent subsistence rights in the U.S. Senate after suing my mother.

A year after my mother passed away at age 97, the Supreme Court refused to accept the State's petition to overturn the lower court's decision in her favor. This was another huge victory in the fight for subsistence rights, at least on federal waters. We still have a long way to go in making sure those rights are protected on all lands and waters across the state.

Reinventing the Wheel

Norton Sound Hospital has reinvented the wheel, and behold it is square. The new system for getting prescriptions is so cumbersome and user-unfriendly, it is hard to imagine how any reasonable person could call it progress.

One used to be able to have a physician call in a prescription and then be able to go to the pharmacy and pick it up. Now one must have script in hand and wait in line while it is filled. If there is more than one prescription, well, line up again and again, but don't expect to be allowed to pay in cash. The process is obfuscated and hard to accept. It certainly is not progress.

There is an answer to the problem. All prescriptions can be transferred to Fred Meyers or a similar pharmacy in Anchorage and mailed to us. The only line would be the one at the Post Office. There are ways to beat the broken system. - N.L.M.-

I am hopeful that one day we will no longer have to struggle against the state for the right to take care of our families in the manner my mother and past ancestors survived. I am hopeful because of leaders like Senator Mark Begich. Despite my reluctance to trust the State, I feel Mark Begich has supported and advocated for subsistence rights. I have watched him carefully from his first day in office - he has consistently made sure our voices are heard when making critical legislative decisions that affect our way of life. For example, the re-authorization of the Magnuson-Stevens Act. Subsistence users are being included in the Act for the first time in the bill's history. Begich also introduced and passed the Traditional Foods Nourishment Act that has helped protect subsistence rights. This legislation stopped the federal government from prohibiting the serving of traditional foods in schools, hospitals, and elder care fa-

Begich's actions prove the State does not have to be at war with our traditional and subsistence rights. After decades of battling the State at every turn, it's a relief to have a politician who not only says he supports us but has also proven himself by fighting to defend and help us build on the progress my mother

My mother worked too hard during her lifetime to protect myself, my family and all future Alaskan generations who depend on subsistence and traditional rights to survive. We need to elect March Begich

The Dock Walk

No fall storms have hit Nome as of yet but cold temperatures cause the inner harbor to freeze up rapidly. As Harbormaster Lucas Stotts attends the annual Alaska Association of Harbormasters and Port Administrators conference in Ketchikan, Joy Baker, special projects manager at the Port of Nome, reported the following activity that took place at the Port and small boat harbor in Nome last week.

On Tuesday, Oct. 7, the Canadian icebreaker Sir Wilfred Laurier anchored in Nome's roadstead. On Wednesday, the research vessel Norseman II arrived in Nome for a crew change and to take on fuel. The tanker vessel Themsestern anchored offshore.

On Thursday, Oct. 9, the Norseman II departed. The landing craft Nunaniq arrived to take on fuel and water and they departed with cargo.

On Saturday, Oct. 11, the Nunaniq arrived late in the evening to take on more water and to discharge a small load at the High Ramp. On Sunday, the research vessel

R/V Aquila arrived in the afternoon for a crew change, to resupply and to let scientists disembark.

On Monday, Oct. 13, the R/VAquila departed in the early afternoon. The Nunaniq was able to get to ramp to discharge cargo.

As freeze-up approaches fast, Baker reports that the majority of activity at the Port/Harbor is reduced to home-ported vessels hauling out for the winter and facility shutdown tasks. Nome Public Works and Harbor crews removed new camel fenders, tire curtains and hauled out city's first responder vessel, The Guardian, on Friday

The Small Boat Harbor is rapidly freezing so users are encouraged to move to the river or haul out for win-

Assault charge: Man bites Doctor

Court documents say Barton Johnson, 23, hit the felony jackpot by biting a local Emergency Room doctor and spitting on a hospital security guard early on Friday, Oct. 10.

Nome Police Dept. Officer Justin Timm picked up Johnson from a disturbance at an east end residence and took him to Norton Sound Regional Hospital for medical evaluation.

According to Timm's written account as part of the charging document filed in Nome Second District Court, NPD Dispatch received a call from NSHC ER concerning the defendant—Barton Johnson—assaulting Dr. Mitchell Moffat, M. D. as well as other staff in the ER just before 6 a.m.

When officer Timm arrived, he saw that Moffat had a laceration on his right hand with fresh blood coming from it, resulting from an attempt by Moffat and security personnel to place Johnson in restraints, according to Moffat.

While being restrained, court documents state, Johnson managed to bite the restraints off.

When a security guard tried to move Johnson's head back, Johnson spit mucus or saliva into the face and mouth of the security guard.

Both Moffat and the security staff member told Timm they wanted to press charges, according to Timm. Johnson was charged with Assault

He has had two other separate assault convictions in the preceding 10 years aggravating the latest assault charge to Assault Three, and adding C Class Felony.

Additionally, Johnson has been charged with Harassment in the First Degree—subjecting another person to offensive physical contact with mucus or saliva.

Johnson has been arraigned on charges and was approved for assistance from the Public Defender Agency.

Council canvasses city elections

By Diana Haecker

Last Thursday, the Nome Common Council made official the results from the Oct. 7 municipal elections. Present were Councilmen Jerald Brown, Tom Sparks, Matt Culley, Stan Andersen and Randy Pomeranz.

City Clerk Tom Moran ran down the numbers.

None of the candidates faced official opponents in the election.

Tom Sparks retained Council seat A for three more years, with a total of 430 votes (92.87 percent); there were 33 write-ins. Louie Green Sr. retained Council seat B, also a threeyear term, with 424 votes (91.97 percent); 37 write-ins.

Fred Moody was re-elected to serve on Utility Board seat B for its two-year term. He had 420 votes, with 28 write-ins.

Carl Emmons retained Utility Board Seat E, a three-year term, with 452 votes (96.58 percent) and 16 write-ins

School Board seat A remained with Jennifer Reader, with 445 votes; 33 write-ins. School Board seat B, also a three-year term, went to Brandy Arrington with 306 votes, 175 write-ins. The majority of writeins ballots were cast for Charles Pul-

The council unanimously passed the resolution that canvassed the re-question whether the City should bacco products from 5 to 8 percent.

gold rushers from the Lower 48 was the Discovery Channel reality TV show "Bering Sea Gold."

During the ice-mining season, the City had to respond to incidents of vehicles stuck on breaking sea ice.

Then, Bahnke said, there is quite a bit of frustration from Nome residents. There are complaints about trash on the beaches, human waste along West Beach, dredges parked at Belmont Point that are perceived of crowding out subsistence users and kids playing on the banks of the Snake River and lack of housing. Bahnke also said she received many complaints about noisy dredges this summer.

"A lot of folks have invested their money in a camp on the beach and with a lot of those dredges working so close to shore, there were a lot of noise complaints," she said.

"We urged him to take a look at the overall picture, not only the offshore mining, but also how it affects our other natural resources and thus other departments," Bahnke said.

Bahnke was pleased that the Commissioner showed up in Nome and duly noted the City's grievances. The group also met with other entities such as Kawerak Inc., Sitnasuak Native Corporation, which owns land at West Beach, Nome Eskimo Community, Bering Straits Native Corpora-

Joe Balash told the Nome Nugget that visiting Nome in-person afforded him an opportunity to see first-hand what is occurring in the community and, in particular, at the Port. "The staff in our Mining Section have done a good job of reporting the impacts, but seeing it with my own eyes will help me consider the use of DNR's authorities to address issues," he wrote.

The City and DNR are working on a Memorandum of Agreement that has not been publicly discussed. Balash said that the formal memorandum of agreement, would be similar to one DNR has in place with the North Slope Borough, but the document itself is still under internal review at DNR. "We hope to send a draft to the City in the next several days. The agreement we have with the NSB lays out a plan for communication and collaboration that occurs at various levels of DNR-including regular meetings between the Mayor and the Commissioner. I expect we will have some similar features in this agreement," he said.

The city would like to see impact studies done on the ramifications of offshore gold mining. It would like to see a full time DNR staffer in Nome. Since Nome Volunteer Fire and Ambulance Departments are the first responders to offshore accidents, the City is concerned about the quality (or lack thereof) of the gold dredges. Not one gold dredge is like another, there is no standard and there is no agency to regulate safe offshore gold mine dredging prac-

It still is an experiment, said Bahnke.

The U.S. Coast Guard conducted outreach, education and even boardings this summer. But the federal agency also has no regulations on the book that set a standard for offshore gold mining. The USCG considers all gold dredges "recreational vessels" no matter if it is a huge barge-type mechanical dredge that sits on jack-up rigs or if it is a cobbled-together gold dredge the size of

Impacts on Port

The impacts from offshore mining are most felt at the port and small boat harbor.

Although this summer offered nice working conditions, unlike many stormy summers, there seemed to have been a lot of dredges tied up at the docks but not working. Harbormaster Lucas Stotts reported a trend away from many smaller dredges. Their proprietors have partnered up and work together on bigger gold dredges.

"We see less smaller dredges but more bigger outfits," Stotts said.

In addition to the Christine Rose, the two Phoenix Marine jack up rigs and the AuGrabber, Ken Kerr with Arctic Sea Mining sent another mega-dredge out to work this summer. Stotts said there were 95 dredges registered at the harbor, with 22 support vessels. In addition to often quoted space issues, Stotts - who also serves on the Volunteer Fire Department— responded to a multitude of emergencies. "We responded to underpowered vessels, to folks falling overboard, to cleaning up oil inside the harbor from boats million), the Nome School Bond fund, the Nome special revenue fund, the Nome capital projects fund and the Nome port fund.

The council also passed unanimously resolutions relating to Nome Joint Utility improvements to water infrastructure and clean water and drinking water loans from the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation.

Under new business, the Nome Common Council approved a resolution naming James West, Jr. as the new Nome Volunteer Fire Depart-

City Manager Josie Bahnke said that Jim West, Jr. has been with the Nome Volunteer Fire Department for 31 years and had served in several roles including Assistant Chief. She said the officers at NVFD unanimously voted for Jimmy West to become their new chief.

In other discussions:

The city received noise complaints related to offshore mining activities that go on day and night as large mechanical dredges mine off the seawall in front of Nome.

Asked about noise ordinances, City Clerk Tom Moran stated that the city does not have a noise ordinance stating the length or decibel level of unacceptable noise.

Councilman Stan Andersen later brought up that residents have complained to him about the noon siren. Police Chief John Papasodora said the system does need to be tested daily, but conceded that the system of sounding a community wide alarm may be antiquated as first responders are toned out through other methods.

Andersen requested the siren be turned off.

During Councilmember comments, Andersen scolded Nome media outlets and those who are critical of alcohol sales in town for not showing up at last week's Alcohol Beverage Control Board.

At their meeting, he said, the Nome Nugget Inn received, under the tourism category, a full-blown liquor license including beer, wine and hard liquor.

"Those supporting the increased sales tax on alcohol, those who are against booze, why don't you show up and object to a brand new liquor license?" he said.

In the absence of a large show of protests – only Chuck Wheeler delivered comments — the liquor license was granted. Andersen also said he didn't realize that Nome resident Bobby Evans was on the board. Evans made the motion to grant the liquor license application and it was approved by the ABC board.

At the end of the meeting, council members decided to take matters into city hands and allow NJUS to install poles and lights on either end of the new Snake River bridge as a temporary measure to make approaches to the bridge safer in the coming dark winter months. Currently, there are no lights installed along Seppala Drive leading to the bridge nor at either ends of the bridge.

Councilmen Tom Sparks and Matt Culley inquired about the feasibility of Nome Police Dept. holding a "Meet and Greet" of its officers.

Community members felt that they are not connected to NPD, they don't know who the officers are and thus came the idea of introducing the officers to the community.

Regarding liability and insurance issues for Nome Volunteer Fire Department volunteers and equipment responding to calls outside City limits, Councilman Culley asked city staff to determine if outside calls pose a liability risk to the city and to look into the creation of a fee associated with NVFD services to emergencies occurring outside the city

The dredge Golden Wave, Stotts reports, lost power, dragged its anchor and was five miles offshore without any means of communication to signal their distress. The fishing vessel Mithril found the dredge by chance and towed it back to har-

The death of 39-year old gold diver Sean Beals from Seattle drove home the point that safety is paramount but that there are no standards applying to offshore gold dredging.

Beals was diving for the dredge Argo. The dive tender found him floating facedown on August 13 in the late evening. According to Alaska State Trooper spokeswoman Megan Peters, the coroner's report said Beals drowned, the manner of death was determined to be accidental and that the case is closed.

The US Coast Guard has launched its own investigation. Spokesman Kip Wadlow said the investigation is still ongoing and that the Coast Guard could not comment.

Harbormaster Stotts said in his observation of day-to-day harbor operations that only half of the offshore miners are proficient in maritime etiquette and knowledge. "Fishermen go to training but no such training is required for offshore gold dredgers," said Stotts. "We work every day individually with every port user. It would be nice if the Coast Guard could offer a training class to benefit the dredgers for their safety, even it if were just the basic rules," Stotts

Asked if there is an end to the gold rush in sight, Stotts responded, 'No, I don't see it dying off at all."

With larger dredges coming in, the harbor gets even more crowded.

Currently, only 25 to 35 percent of those holding DNR permits are Alaska residents. The other 65 percent of permit holders are from out of state. All permits for 2014 expire at the end of the calendar year. "We are in the process of working through the various stipulations and conditions that are a part of those permits and will try to use those tools to address some of the impacts on the ground in Nome," said Balash. "We may have a way to require applicants show they have housing in Nome, but it's too soon to say precisely how that will work. We can definitely manage some things better than others through our permitting requirements, but that won't be the answer to everything," he said.

Balash pointed out that, in particular, there will be swift consequences for any interference with subsistence activities. "Part of that will require us to educate the miners, most of whom don't want to cause a problem. Part of that will require us to be diligent in monitoring and enforcement."

The City and other local organizations need to reach out and connect with the miners," said Bahnke. We need to work together to improve the lines of communication and put forward a more collaborative effort to give a voice to the folks who live here and mine, and those who just live here."

Balash said that is recognition that offshore mining activity provides an economic benefit to the City and residents. "We just need to make sure from our end that we are balancing all of the interests for the benefit of all parties-continuous improvement by DNR in the way we conduct our business is the goal and I am confident we can achieve the proper balance," he said.

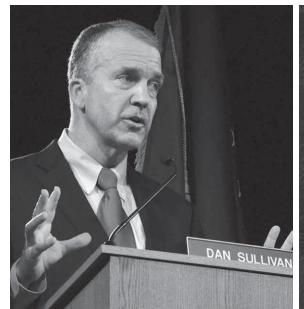

The most pressing issue for the next season will be alleviating the perennial housing crunch. A few years ago, Nome Gold Co. opened a gravel pit area near West Beach and Dredge 6 as a campground for visiting miners. However, the company found that the campground had been trashed. They sent out a letter this spring to all leaseholders that terminated their leases on Nome Gold land effective Oct. 1. Now, 13 days past the deadline, some leaseholders still have their trash, cars, and dysfunctional machinery there. Community liaison with Nome Gold. Nikolai Ivanoff, said that nothing has been moved although he sent out notices, hand-delivered them and asked people to comply.

"Nome Gold gave them all summer to prepare to move their things, but they didn't and now the company has to prepare for the next step," Ivanoff said.

STILL THERE— Nome Company officials terminated the leases on their Dredge 6 camp ground for gold miners, but lease holders did not adhere to the Oct. 1 deadline and left their belongings and trash behind. The company now considers their options what the next steps are to get squatters off company land.

Mary's Igloo and Teller—and we wanted a community meeting so everybody's there together, and just leave our annual meeting for the Teller tribe," he explained. Okbaok said Huntington has agreed to meet with the Teller community in mid-November.

Graphite One Resources is holding a public meeting in Nome on Wednesday, Oct. 15.

Graphite One increased its financing for exploration and development of the Graphite Creek project to $4 million through two recent tranche (specific class of bonds) offerings, according to a press release the company issued Sept. 10. The release says the Graphite Creek project is the only advanced staged large-scale, large flake graphite deposit in the United States.

The development and operation of a large hardrock mine in Alaska requires numerous state, federal and local government permits.

The DNR Office of Project Management and Permitting coordinates the permitting of large mine projects in the state. DNR issued a four-year temporary water use permit to Graphite One in 2012.

Tribal water rights meeting

Okbaok and representatives of other Alaska tribes participated in the Seventh Annual Northwest Tribal Water Rights Conference staged last week in Anchorage by the Center for Water Advocacy, an Alaska nonprofit conservation organization that focuses on the long-term sustainability of water resources. They discussed information provided by representatives of organizations that help tribes protect their subsistence resources and rights through government-to-government consultation with agencies responsible for developing land use plans or for issuing permits for mining activities in Alaska.

Paul Robinson, research director for the Southwest Research and Information Center in Albuquerque, New Mexico is working with the Center for Water Advocacy to provide technical assistance to Teller and Brevig Mission to help them address the current Granite One proposals and activities.

Robinson presented evidence that more than 90 percent of households in Teller and Brevig Mission harvest salmon and a variety of non-salmon fish; 90 percent gather berries; 67 percent hunt seals; and about 20 percent take land mammals. Birds and bird eggs are used consistently as subsistence food, he added. He cited as his source of information the North Pacific Research Board final report on a comprehensive subsistence use study of the Bering Strait Region published in January 2008, titled "Bering Strait Region Local and Traditional Knowledge Pilot Project." He used map overlays provided by Okbaok to depict areas of traditional subsistence use on Granite One claims.

Robinson also used a map to identify streams from which Granite One plans to appropriate water under its temporary water use permit from DNR. He said DNR has not replied to a letter sent to the agency by the Teller and Mary's Igloo tribal councils in June of this year that asks if Graphite One has proper water use permits and if it is using more water than their permits request.

During a meeting Oct. 9 with DNR's Large Mine Project Coordinator Jack DiMarchi, Robinson said he learned that DiMarchi had not seen the letter.

In December 2013, Graphite One amended its DNR Multi-Agency Permit Application to include winter cross country travel and preparation of the new camp area on state land located off the company's claim block. The amended application proposes to use a bulldozer to pull skid-mounted drills. "The dozer will be mobilized onsite via winter haul route from the proposed new camp location," the document reads.

DNR information on Winter Travel Permits states: "Cross-country travel on snow or ice roads is

Stebbins man charged on eight felony assaults in DV beating

By Sandra L. Medearis

Multiple felony charges stemmed from Daniel M. Pete, 29, allegedly beating his girlfriend and his sister on Oct. 10.

An additional two harassment misdemeanor charges related to spitting in his girlfriend's face during the assault brought the total to 10 charges, all domestic violence related. They occurred following a night of drinking at the home shared with girlfriend Joan Nashoanak, a village health aide.

Stebbins Village Public Safety Officer Leonard Raymond described the face of Daniel Pete's sister Pamela Pete's as "unrecognizable" in his report to Alaska State Trooper Timothy Smith.

Dan Pete rammed Pamela's head repeatedly with the barrel of a gun.

A witness said Pete pulled the trigger each time he hit Pamela with the barrel. He then beat Pamela in the face with the firearm. Pamela had one eye swollen shut, according to court filings, and stitches to close scalp wounds.

Smith arrived in Stebbins at noon following the assaultsAlcohol was a major factor, according to charging documents filed in Nome Second District Court.

Nashoanak had sought refuge at the village clinic with her infant and 11-year-old daughter, after Pete had allegedly hit her on the sides of the face, choked her and spit in her face.

Nashoanak had jumped out of the window with her baby and ran to call the VPO.

Pete and his sister Pamela had been drinking at the Pete-Nashoanak residence.

The attacks occurred after Nashoanak asked the two to leave the home, stating she was on call as health aide and needed rest, according to court records.

Law enforcement found a 7.62X39 mm semi-automatic rifle outside Pamela's residence. Smith found blood in the residence and on the rifle, according to Smith's affidavit.

A friend, Marlene Pete, and Nashoanak's 11-year-old daughter witnessed the assaults. Their accounts, cited by Smith and his own investigation, spelled out a drunken rampage by Pete.

When confronted at his parent's residence the morning after the assaults, Pete had no memory of the evening and said he had "blacked out," according to Smith's affidavit.

Pete was arraigned on two Assault 2 charges (Class B felonies)—causing physical injury to another person with a dangerous weapon, with intent; six Assault 3 charges (Class C felonies)—recklessly placed another person in fear of imminent serious physical injury by means of a dangerous instrument; two Harassment 1 charges—subjected another person to offensive physical contact with human or animal blood, mucus, saliva, semen, urine, vomit or feces—both misdemeanors.

Some of the assault charges stem from putting Marlene Pete, Nashoanak's friend and a witness to the domestic violence in fear of injury from a dangerous weapon.

Pete was arraigned on Oct. 11 and was provided Alaska Public Defender legal representation.

Stebbins is a village on the south side of Norton Sound.

It has a population of about 550.

commonly used to stage equipment and supplies for a project. A permit from Division of Mining, Land and Water/Lands Section must be obtained before constructing such roads on state land, or conducting overland travel. Crossing fish-bearing water bodies by snow or ice roads requires authorization by ADF&G Habitat prior to construction."

Robinson said the bulldozer would cross a series of streams on Graphite One's winter haul route.

He said the company also proposes to use a bulldozer for exploration trenching, which would disturb land, generate sediment and leak hydrocarbons from lubricants on its tracks.

Robinson estimated that Graphite One has three to four years of exploration work ahead. "It's a small company with very limited resources," he said. "They haven't been able to raise the money that their consultants told them they needed for the next exploration stage. There was a $10 million recommended budget for 2014; the company has been able to raise about $4 million." Robinson said he found that information in a report Graphite One filed with the Canadian Security Administration, as required under a regulation called NI 43-101.

Graphite claims on BLM lands

Hal Shepherd, executive director of the Center for Water Advocacy asked Suzanne Little of the Pew Charitable Trusts to describe services her organization provides to tribes that use BLM lands. "They are very focused on tribal involvement issues," he said, adding that Little reminds the BLM of its trust duties. "She's in the process of helping tribes to develop Memorandums of Agreement with BLM. We're working with Teller on a very similar process because Graphite One that Wesley (Okbaok) is concerned about-much of that land is on BLM land."

Little described two land use plans BLM is developing for huge areas of Alaska: One covers the central Yukon area from the Beaufort Sea down to Denali and includes 16 million acres of BLM land, a lot of which surrounds small communities. Fifteen communities in the area have government-to-government responsibilities. The BLM plan for the Western Bering Sea area stretches from Denali to the Bering Sea and includes 10 million acres of BLM land, much of which is adjacent to communities.

"It's really important for those communities to become knowledgeable about this planning process," Little noted. She said more than 54 communities and 66 tribal governments with government-to-government responsibilities and privileges are in the Western Bering Sea planning area.

Little said she thinks BLM sent letters to tribes asking for nominations for areas of critical environmental concern but never did any follow-up. Tribes didn't really understand what an area of critical environmental concern was and why they would want to nominate one.

'We're working on a model document for a memorandum of understanding that tribes can use to enter into a government-to-government consultation with BLM," Little said. "We're going to send our model document out to tribes so tribes can say, 'Hey, we want to do this with you, BLM,' and it has a specific time at which it'll be good for BLM to come to your village and talk to you."

Little said the BLM is expected to issue a draft land use plan in September of 2015 followed by a 90-day public comment period.

Nanooks spike regional foes at Second Annual Arctic Pinkies Volleyball Tournament

By Keith Conger

Friday Night

The Nome-Beltz Lady Nanooks volleyball players seem to have developed a liking for playing in the bright lights on Friday nights. For the second weekend in a row, both the varsity and junior varsity squads came away with victories to open a home series.

Friday evening's feature match in the Second Annual Arctic Pinkies Volleyball Tournament was billed as Senior Night. Rene Merchant, Rena Sparks, Alyssa Bushey, Jane Tidwell, Lacy Erikson, and Bailey Immingan-Carpenter were recognized for their years of playing. The older Nanooks had little time to regroup after the pre-match ceremony before their clash with the Barrow Whalers.

Both the Nanooks and their Region 1 North rival Whalers came out rather flat in the first set. With her team down 14-15, Bushey was able to serve the team to an 18-15 lead. Junior Kalani Suemai provided a much-needed spark with a kill shot. A tipped ball by Bushey at set point helped the team cap a solid 25-18 first set victory.

The Nanooks jumped out to a 6-2 lead in the second set, before allowing the Whalers to claw back to a score of 10-10. At that point, sophomore Kim Clark went on an offensive tear. The outside hitter had a kill shot and a well placed tip to help her team score. Clark came up to serve at 15-13 and delivered two consecutive rocket aces, then a third effective serve to bring the team to 18-13.

Seniors like Merchant know how important it is to get serves in at the end of a set. At 23-16, Merchant displayed her veteran calm and cool by delivering two great serves that led to points. The Nanooks finished the second set 25- 16.

It seemed the Nanooks had developed that killer instinct in the next game, and were en route to winning a clinching third set by jumping out to 7-1 and 10-3 leads. While Bushey and Tidwell traded kill shots with their opponents, the Whalers slowly crept their way back to a 20-20 tie.

A well-placed tip by Merchant, together with a service ace by junior Rayne Lie, brought the Nanooks to 24-23, and match point. Barrow, however, answered with a service ace of their own. From that point on, they refused to allow the ball to hit the floor on their side of the court, and were able to steal a 26-24 victory from the Nome girls.

All match long, Whalers freshman Milya Wright had been extending her swing on attack. By the fourth set, she gained more and more confidence on every touch. Late in the set, Wright sent a rocket that the Nanooks could not respond to as she helped her team keep the match close at 20-19.

At that point, Suemai came to the service line and would not leave. Her team would not give up another point.

The finishing spurt by the Nanooks would not come easily, though. The play of the match happened with the team up 23-19. Wright delivered the most thunderous hit of the night, but junior libero Kailey Witrosky produced the toughest defensive dig of the evening and was able to keep the ball in play. Suemai delivered an ace on match point. Nome had won its first contest against Barrow this year.

Recognizing the importance of the win after the match Merchant said, "We really wanted to beat Barrow because they beat us at West (three weeks ago)."

The Nome junior varsity players took a tougher path in their opening match with the Barrow junior varsity by losing two of the first three sets. The team regrouped to have their most dominant set at home this year.

Junior Tehya Tucker and freshman Annalise Contreras delivered solid kill shots to help their team to an 18-10 fourth set lead. Soon after that, sophomore Megan Contreras delivered her second big, varsitystyle swing of the night on offense. She sent a rocket kill shot that brought her team to 19-12. Helped by solid serving, including an ace by Taylor Brunette, the team was able to even the match with a confidence building 25-14 victory.

Nome-Beltz wrestlers start season with trip to Bethel

By Keith Conger

Maybe it's the clean water, the subsistence living, or some other X-factor, but the best 1A, 2A, 3A wrestling in the state of Alaska in recent years has come from the western regions.

Three of Alaska's top five small schools teams in 2013 come from either the Great Western Conference, which includes the defending state champion Bethel Warriors, or the Northern Conference, which includes the fifth place Nome-Beltz Nanooks and the state runner-up, the Kotzebue Huskies.

Nome-Beltz is coached by Dudley Holmelvig, a veteran of 31 years coaching in Alaska. He got an idea of where his crew stands last weekend by heading south to Bethel High School with the team for its first meet – the Bethel Scramble. There, his team took on wrestlers from many of the small schools surrounding the southern regional hub.

"This is a tough room," stated Holmelvig from the Nanooks' team practice facility at the National Guard Armory the day before leaving for the meet. He was referring to the strong talent retained from last year's squad.

ar's squad. Holmelvig, an Alaska Wrestling Hall of Fame inductee, said that he thinks the current team has a chance to crack the top three at state this year, but that won't come easily.

"Five defending state champions are from the Northern Conference," stated Holmelvig. "And that doesn't even count all of (last year's) 2nd, 3rd, and 4th place finishers"

In order to repeat its performance, the team will need to meet or exceed the feat they produced the year before. In 2013 the Nanooks had seven wrestlers place in the top six in their respective weight classes.

Emery Booshu, Leif Erikson, James Horner, and Oliver Hoogendorn are the team's four remaining state placers. This talented crew will need current wrestlers to step up to take the places of recent graduates.

Leading his teammates down in Bethel was three-time defending state champion, Booshu. The ultratalented Nome wrestler, who beat out all others in the 138-pound class last year, has the chance to achieve the very rare feat of winning the state tournament in each of his four years in high school.

Because Scramble is a smaller meet, the 152 and 160 pound weight classes were combined. Nome claimed the top four spots in the division, with Booshu in first, James Horner (the 2013 4th place finisher in the 145-pound class) in second, Timothy James in third, and Ethan Kelso in fourth.

Erikson, the defending state champion at the 126-pound weight class, came in first in the 132/138-pound division.

Gabe Smith came in first in the 145-pound class at the meet. Both Hoogendorn, competing in the 170/182-pound class, and Nolan Horner, wrestling in the 195/220 class, took 2nd place in their respective divisions.

Holmelvig has recruited some talented coaching help. The assistants are led by Cory Erikson, who was instrumental in helping develop an elementary program in Nome.

Booshu's older brother Lonnie is coaching the junior high team, as well as helping out with the high schoolers. The elder Booshu carries an impressive wrestling resume himself, having been a state placer all four of his high school years. Booshu was twice the state runner up, losing only to a wrestler who went on to compete at the Big Ten's University of Minnesota.

The Nome-Beltz Nanook wrestling team will next compete on October 24 and 25 at the Nome Invitational. Nome, Bethel, and Kotzebue will be joined by teams from Galena, Unalakleet, and Saint Michael.

fifth set, neither team could extend the lead past two points. With the score tied at eight, Tucker served her team to an 11-8 lead. The Nanooks were buoyed by a well-placed corner shot by Megan Contreras.

This resulted in a momentum stopping time out by Barrow. When the teams returned from the 60-second respite, the Whalers scored four unanswered points, bringing themselves to match point at 14 – 13.

Freshman Jillian Stettenbenz would have nothing to do with losing, and offered a timely kill shot to tie the score. Sparks launched a service ace to bring the junior varsity Nanooks to their first match point at Stettenbenz continued her front row heroics by perfectly placing a ball out of the reach of all the Barrow players. This helped her team to a 16-14 set win - a three sets to two match victory.

The opening match in the afternoon saw the Bethel Warriors varsity squad fall to the junior varsity team from Anchorage's Dimond High School 10-25, 15-25, 16-25.

Saturday Night

Although the Nanooks varsity girls woke up Saturday morning with good feelings from the night before, there was still one piece of the regional volleyball "who's who" puzzle remaining to be determined. By the time the feature match of Saturday night against the Bethel Warriors was complete, the girls from Nome had solved that in a big way.

The Warriors jumped out to a 5-3 lead to open the first set, but Nome would use Tidwell's second kill shot, coupled with sharp serving by Merchant to climb to a 13-7 lead. The Warriors scored only six points from that point on. The Nanooks were able to win easily by a score of 25-

The third game was a feeding frenzy for the Nanooks. They started out the set with two, point-scoring spikes from Bushey and a perfectly placed ball down the line by Clark. Merchant came to serve at 9-5 and left the service rotation at 18-6. The Nanooks used that momentum to hold their opponents to single digits for the set, winning 25-9.

For the second consecutive night, the girls from Nome held a 2-0 advantage to open a match. Unlike the night before, when they let set three slip away from them, the Nanooks were determined to make a short night of things. A resounding midset, roof-like block by Bushey was the play the girls needed to run away from the Warriors by a score of 25-

With Saturday night's victory, the Lady Nanooks have played, and beaten, all three of their regional opponents this season. They have also lost three matches to the Kotzebue Huskies and one to Barrow. The two victories during the Arctic Pinkies Tournament brings their regional record to 3-4 on the year.

The Huskies lead the region at mid-season with a 6- 1 record. The Whalers trail the Nanooks with a 1-3 record. The Warriors, who have yet to play Kotzebue this season, have started regional play with a 0-2 record.

The Nome-Beltz Nanooks junior varsity team beat the Bethel Warriors junior varsity team on Saturday 25-8, 25-18, 25-14.

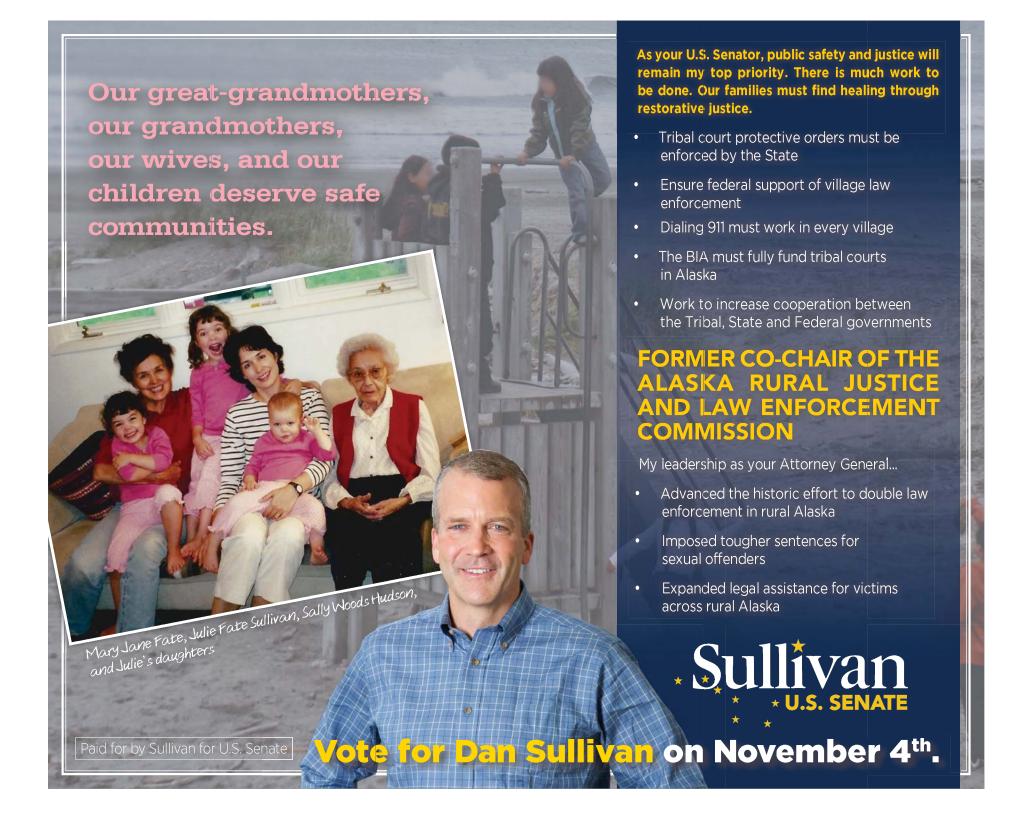

The winner of the tournament was the junior varsity team from Anchorage's Dimond High. The Lady Lynx won every set they played, on their way to a perfect 3-0 record. The girls from Barrow, however, did not go down quietly against the Dimond girls. They were able to extend the third set to a score of 28-26.

Merchant and Bushey were named to the all-tourney team. They were joined by Bethel's Rebecca Strickland, Barrow's Wright, and Dimond's Destiny Suaava and Bristol Shields.

This weekend tournament got its name from the Arctic Pinkies, an organization founded in 2007. Its mission is to raise cancer awareness. Donations are used so support regional cancer patients and continued cancer research efforts. Included in the weekend's fundraising efforts were donations by local businesses and organizations for on court performances such as blocks, aces, and kills

The Lady Nanooks varsity squad will travel to West Valley High School in Fairbanks this coming Thursday. They are entered to play in a tournament in Delta Junction over the weekend.

Saying it Sincerely

My Two Cents Rev Ross Tozzi St. Joseph Catholic Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

As he was admiring the hand made crafts of a native artist, a rich young professor asked the 21 - year-old woman how much she earned for the bamboo stools that she made. She replied that she borrowed 9 cents per basket from a middleman for the ingredients she needed. After she sold each item, all but 2 cents went back to the lender. The rich young man said to himself, "My God, for 9 cents she has become a slave. She is such a skilled artist, how can she be so poor when she is making such beautiful things.'

The following day, the professor and his students did a survey in the woman's village. They discovered that 43 of the villagers owed a total of about $27. Each one was taken advantage of and working like a slave. The professor said, "I can't take it anymore. I must help them out." He offered the group of villagers $27 so they could liberate themselves. He explained, "these are my terms for lending you the money, pay me back whenever you can. Please buy your own materials and cut out the middleman.'

Day by day, over the course of a year, each villager paid back the professor and his momentary generosity grew into a full-fledged concept. Four years later, he set up an experimental bank to finance projects in rural parts of Bangladesh. In the years since the bank has loaned billions to help the lives of millions of Bangladeshi who would otherwise not qualify for loans from conventional banks.

When the rich young professor had grown to be an old man, he was offered a Nobel Prize along with $1.4 Million. The wise professor was asked what he would do with his prize money. He responded, "This award will encourage me to further dedicate myself to improving the lives of the poor," I can use part of this money to create a company that will make low-cost, high-nutrition food for the poor. The rest of the award will go toward setting up an eye hospital for the poor.

Each year as Alaskans receive their Permanent Fund Dividend, companies throughout the state run special deals and sales to help us spend our dividends. We are indeed thankful for this generous gift that helps us to stretch our dollars a little further. Have you ever considered how you might invest this gift in a different way? What if you were to invest just $27 in the lives of others so that their lives might be improved?

is undergoing treatment following an industrial accident on Sept. 26.

A crane tipped over at a worksite in Nome, bringing the boom down on the truck Warnke-Green was driving.

The boom crushed the cab of the flatbed truck. Warnke-Green, 25, suffered serious spinal and neck injuries.

The state Occupational Safety and Health Administration section of the Dept. of Labor and Workforce Development has the accident under investigation

Beth Leschper, spokeswoman, said Monday the investigation is still ongoing and therefore she could not comment.

However, "when the investigation is complete, some parts of the information would be available to the public, depending on circumstances" she said.

Warnke-Green was working a Pro-West Contractors of Wasilla worksite at the junction of the Nome-Teller Highway and the Dexter Pass Road when the accident happened early Sunday morning.

Medevac crews flew Warnke-Green to Anchorage and then on to Seattle on Sept. 26.

A community fundraiser including a "split the pot staged at the Arctic Native Brotherhood in Nome collected more than $26,000 for Warnke Green, according to family members.

This is a notice of unclaimed capital credits for members of record of Alaska Village Electric Cooperative (AVEC).

AVEC hereby now gives notice that capital credit payments are now and have been available since June 14, 2001 at the office of the Cooperative at 4831 Eagle Street Anchorage, Alaska 99503, to its members.

Thousands of checks and letters were returned as undeliverable or checks remain uncashed. This emphasizes the need for members to provide AVEC with a forwarding address when they leave the system – and to keep AVEC apprised of future address changes until all accumulated capital credits have been returned.

Even if their checks were returned as undeliverable or have not been cashed, former members or their estates may still claim their capital credits. AVEC's website contains a list of 3,248 members or former members who are still due capital credits. Please visit www.avec.org , click on the "Money For You" menu option and review this list for your name.

If your name appears on the list, or if you have information that may help AVEC locate someone listed, please fill out the online form and return it to:

Capital credits from these retirements which have not been claimed by April 30, 2015 will revert to Alaska Village Electric Cooperative. If you have questions, please call AVEC at 800-478-1818.

Listening session highlights need to educate federal agencies on Arctic matters

By Diana Haecker As part of the Week of the Arctic in Nome, high-ranking federal officials drew a rather large crowd to the Nome City Council Chambers. Special Representative for the Arctic Admiral Robert Papp, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Oceans and Fisheries Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs Ambassador David A. Balton, Special Advisor and Chair of the U.S. Arctic Research Commission Fran Ulmer and Rear Admiral Daniel Abel opened the floor to comments what policy makers should know about the Arctic and why it mattered.

Admiral Papp remembered his first trip to the Arctic in 1976. He was aboard a Coast Guard cutter and sea ice in June forced them to give up their mission to reach Kotzebue. Fast forward to 2010, I flew into Kotzebue around the same time of the year, and there was no ice anywhere to be seen," he said. Back then, thick sea ice was normal. Papp checked recent records on ice extent, and not seeing ice in 2010 was not an extreme event. "It's the new normal," said Papp.

He noted the fact so well known by regional residents. The Arctic is changing and doing so fast. In order to adjust to the new realities, the U.S. must catch up with the rest of Arctic nations. In 2015, the U.S. will chair the Arctic Council, a high-level intergovernmental forum consisting of Canada, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Russia, Sweden and the United States. Papp drew an analogy from his 14 years at sea. "You protect your ship and boat first because it protects you and your crew," he said. The most drastic thing that can happen is either a fire or flooding on the ship. "If you have flooding, you want to plug and patch the leaks, you don't worry about painting hull, or doing other superficial things. It's an all hands effort to plug and patch and then you can start dewatering and provide stability.

In my humble estimation, there is a lot of plugging and patching that needs to be done, because we are playing catch up with the rest of the Arctic nations," he said.

Ambassador Balton explained what the Arctic Council is.

He invited comments from the public stating what Arctic residents want to see be done at the Arctic Council level while the U.S. has the chairmanship. Balton said he would like to continue the work that Canada has begun under their current chairmanship to address oceans and fisheries issues, building resilience to climate change.

Fran Ulmer echoed his invitation to comment and to supply good information to policymakers. "We live in a time of dramatic change," she said. "Not only the climate is changing, but cultural and economical change as well."

Rear Admiral Dan Abel, the successor to Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo, introduced himself to the Nome community. "I am brand new from Boston so I need to do a lot of listening," he said. Abel oversees the 17th District Coast Guard, which consists of 2,700 men and women.

Denise Michels was the first to deliver public comment.

Michels said that Nome is experiencing increased dockings at the Port, which will only increase in the

She requested that the Arctic Council under American chairmanship conduct their meetings in Alaska and also in Alaskan hub communities off the road system.

She also asked to further the idea of enacting voluntary measures in the shipping industry to adhere to the Coast Guard's Port Access Route Study and to ratify the UNCLOS Law of the Sea treaty.

Jack Omelak spoke on behalf of Willie Goodwin, chair of the Alaska Marine Mammal Coalition. Omelak summarized the creation of the AMMC, which consists of five Native Co-management groups dealing with marine mammals (polar bear, beluga, walrus, ice seals and whales).

The AMMC took the lead in the effort to create an Arctic Waterways Safety Committee, with the assistance and blessing of the U.S. Coast Guard, NOAA and other entities.

Kawerak Inc. President Melanie Bahnke brought the needs of the people to the attention of Balton, Papp and Ulmer.

We are all are in this together," Bahnke said. "We want to sit at the table together with you and we want to develop recommendations with you, not just comment on plans after they're drafted."

Bahnke asked for a comprehensive approach to Arctic Policy as opposed to the splintered approach, where every federal department or entity is coming out with its own 'Arctic Strategy.

"All those need to be merged, prioritized and Alaska Natives need to be at the table," she said.

The Week of the Arctic in Nome ended on Tuesday after a full day of discussion about maritime issues. The Week of the Arctic, hosted by the Institute of the North, then held similar workshops and work sessions in Kotzebue and Barrow.

Two men found unharmed after search

By Diana Haecker

On Monday, Nome Volunteer Fire Department Search and Rescue volunteers searched for two missing men after they two didn't return home from a joyride to the country in two side-by-side vehicles on Sunday afternoon.

Both men, Mike McNally and Eric Spencer, were located in good health on the Kougarok Road on Monday before noon by Tony Gorn, assisting in the search in an Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game plane.

According to Alaska State Trooper Aileen Witrosky, AST received a call for the overdue pair on Sunday, Oct. 19 at 11 p.m. Witrosky said family members reported that the two men went for a ride in two side-by-sides and were supposed to be home that evening.

Troopers notified NVFD's SAR unit. Fire Chief Jim West Jr. said he received the call around 2:30 a.m. and decided to send his volunteers out at daybreak to look for the two missing men.

The searchers had no good idea about the route taken by the two men. Trooper Witrosky said, initially, there was indication they went to the Cripple Creek area, near West Beach. Later, information came in that they liked to travel on the Buster Creek trail to the Flambeau area. Twelve to fourteen Nome SAR volunteers fanned out in their personal

Planning Commission wants public input

By Diana Haecker

The Nome Planning Commission held an open house on Thursday afternoon at Old St. Joe's to present several concepts to the public and ask for input. Planning commissioners Larry Pederson and Kenny Hughes were on hand to answer questions. City Planner Eileen Bechtol was present as well.

At the first exhibit table was Kevin Doniere with Corvus Design. He presented a spread of conceptual designs for a future park at Middle Beach. The drawings depicted green spaces, a pavilion, an amphitheatre, a playground, park benches, rest rooms and a fire pit for winter use.

This design had been discussed with the Planning Commission and was now ready for public view and input so the commission could develop a master plan for the project. After approval, the plan will be submitted to the Common Council.

Doniere said the open design of the space allows for good surveillance and monitoring, ensuring the safety of park users, including chil-

In addition to thoughts about the park design, attendees were asked to write their ideas for naming the park on a large white board. Brian Timbers Memorial Park and Ada Blackiack Golden Beach Park were two suggestions.

From March to June of this year, the city solicited input from the Nome public in a zoning code and enforcement survey. "What enforcement priority do you place on the following potential zoning code violations?" was the first question. Nearly 80 percent answered "unsafe

Graphite One Resources: Long ways to develop a mine

In front of a large crowd, the project team was quick to point out that community engagement is high on their priority list. Alluding to scorched earth left behind by NovaGold Resources Inc. and their failure to live up to promises relating to the Rock Creek Gold mine, Graphite One hurried to distinguish themselves as having a different approach to community engagement and accountability. "I know that we sort of have a legacy we're up against here," said General Manager David Hembree. "I'm sure there are a lot of questions here tonight where we can differentiate from what's been going on in the past. We want you to have a say in what possibly could be developed here and this is the first of many meetings. We try to keep you informed at least at a quarterly

In addition to Hembree, Executive chairman and director Doug Smith, President/CEO Anthony Huston and geologist Jo Price were present. Graphite One hired Joy Huntington of Fairbanks to serve as the community engagement consultant.

It was clear that those present did not come for the spaghetti dinner or the door prizes. It was information people were after, to shed a light on the intent of the new development that could impact primarily the communities Teller and Brevig Mission, and also Nome.

Dear Editor:

Like many people I, a strong Byron Mallott supporter, was caught by surprise by the changes made in the campaigns and the formation of the Unity Ticket with Bill Walker for Governor and Byron Mallott for Lieutenant Governor. Now I am over the shock and I will be campaigning for the Unity ticket. Bill Walker will be a far better Governor than the current one, and he will have a super strong teammate in

I will give just one example of why that's so, an important one for me and many families. Governor Parnell cooked his goose when he turned down the opportunity from the feds to increase Medicaid for Alaska. Walker and Mallott are in favor of receiving those funds. Those funds will in particular help many kids whose folks otherwise have to scramble to pay for medical insurance for them. Even with "Affordable Care" I know the costs are not affordable for many, including many adults. I am thinking of independent small business people, artists, young people unable to find jobs, fishermen, and so on. Parnell turned down the added Medicaid funds. For similar reasons, I will vote for Mark Begich for Senator. But that will take another letter.

We need a new governor and a continuing Senator that care about all Alaskans, not just favored groups. And we need, as Alaskans, to be sure to go to the polls Tues, Nov. 4th.

Make no mistake, ladies and gentlemen of Alaska, the whole of the US Congress wrote, debated and voted on the Affordable Care Act. Now it is the job of Congress to review and simply fix any part of the law they passed that isn't working.

Monitoring reveals warmer Gulf of Alaska waters

Warmer than normal waters in the Gulf of Alaska surprised scientists who have studied the waters over the shelf south of Seward for the past 17 years. During a September cruise, the team found the upper 300 feet to be 1 to 5 degrees warmer than the September averages of 55-57°F. They also found warm-water species of plankton, a vital food for fish and other marine life, farther north than usual.

"It was like working in a bath tub out there," said chief scientist Russell Hopcroft, a professor at the University of Alaska Fairbanks School of Fisheries and Ocean Sciences, "except for the high winds and 12foot swell. This year was more than 1°F warmer than any other year we

According to Hopcroft, warmer temperatures along the transect known as the Seward Line - are partly a result of an unusual winter that left the Gulf's offshore waters warmer than normal. A warm-water anomaly in the tropical Pacific Ocean may have added to the rise in temperatures.

Other research teams in Alaska this summer have found warmer waters from Southeast Alaska through the Bering Sea, according to Hopcroft.

Rising temperatures can have big consequences for marine life. Some cold-water fish, crab, plankton and other species experience challenges when water is too warm. Other species grow more quickly in warm water but burn more calories and therefore must find more food.

During warm years like these, ature and salinity data at different depths. The Seward Line continues to be the sentinel long-term monitoring site in the Gulf of Alaska, helping scientists understand the details of what is happening in the waters over the Alaska shelf and, most importantly, its biological consequences. Other examples of ocean monitoring technologies currently in use include profiling drifters that help monitor temperature and salinity in the deep ocean beyond the continental shelf: satellites that track the development of these warm conditions at the ocean's surface; fixed buoys suited with instruments; and biological and chemical samples taken from ships. Data repositories, like the Alaska Ocean Observing System online at www.aoos.org, help aggregate and integrate the data into maps for easy interpretation by researchers and managers.

More fish migrate north

The Canadian Press reports that climate change is forcing hundreds of valuable fish species toward the poles, according to a study published in the ICES Journal of Marine Science. The study concludes that Canadian and Arctic waters may end up with more species and greater abundance. While fish species shift north, fisheries in the tropics will decrease.

According to the article, scientists forecast the distribution of 802 commercially exploited fish species, including cod, tuna, herring and halibut. The study found the fish are slowly moving toward the South and North poles at a rate of between 15 and 26 kilometers a decade. The effect is more pronounced in the Arctic, where warming is happening at a faster rate. It is unknown how invasive species will interact with existing species and the ecosystems.

The scientist caution to leave the new fish stocks alone until scientists have a chance to learn what's happening with them and how they'll interact with existing populations. The

Arctic Council senior officials to meet this week in Yellowknife

Nunatsiaq News reports that senior Arctic officials of the Arctic Council are meeting in Yellowknife, Canada this week. They are discussing pollutants, animal and plant diversity, marine shipping issues and emergency preparedness.

The Oct. 22-23 meeting is meant to "assess progress on the council's priorities during Canada's chairmanship," says an Oct. 20 news release. "This meeting marks an important milestone on the way to the Arctic Council's 2015 ministerial meeting," said the senior officials' chair, Vincent Rigby, in the news release. The ministerial meeting is scheduled for April 24 to April 25, 2015, in Iqaluit, Canada.

The Arctic Council's working groups and task forces plan to update the senior officials on the following

• a report by the Arctic Contaminants Action Program on the reduction of black carbon emissions, such as soot from residential wood combustion in the Arctic:

- an update from the Arctic Monitoring and Assessment Program on short-lived climate pollutants, human health, persistent organic pollutants (POPs) and radioactivity;
- policy priorities from the Protection of the Arctic Marine Environment group's work on revisions to the Arctic Marine Strategic Plan — a plan which sets out priorities for the next 10 years and covers such topics as marine-protected areas and Arctic tourism:
- · work of the Sustainable Development Working Group to promote traditional and local knowledge, develop a climate change adaptation portal and promote mental wellness in the circumpolar Arctic;

SLEEPERSHARK— Barret Eningowuk harvested an unusual animal on Oct. 19 about eight miles northeast of Shishmaref. He mistook this sleeper shark as a seal. The shark was first seen in a lagoon channel heading back out to the sea. It is one of the only known live specimen harvested in the Chukchi Sea. The entire shark was shipped to the UAF Museum of the North for further study and preservation. Sleeper sharks are sluggish, typically live near the seafloor, and eat a variety of slowmoving prey. They don't hunt fast-moving fish, seals and other marine life and consume those species only when dead. Other observations of sleeper sharks were documented when a 7'6" specimen washed up at Point Hope in 1998. A few years ago, a sleeper shark washed up at Teller.

DONE FOR THE YEAR— Mandatory improvements to the Runway Safety Area at the Nome International Airport were done this construction season. Next year the project will be continued.

Nome Airport runway construction wraps up for the year

By Diana Haecker

Quality Asphalt Paving, the contractor for the Dept. of Transportations runway safety improvements at the Nome International Airport, wrapped up their work for the year. Max Vockner with QAP reports that the crosswind runway's safety areas on both ends of the runway have been upgraded.

Work done included drainage improvements. While the length of the runway known as 3-21, has not been increased, a run-off area of 200 feet has been added. The entire runway has shifted a little bit to the north. New material was added, the sides were graded and a wider runway shoulder was created.

Next year in spring, work will continue on the main runway safety area improvements. Beginning in April, QAP will move the Snake River at the west of the runway by 150 feet. Taking advantage of frozen ground and the least amount of water, the work crew will begin excavating the river bank. Starting mid May the crew will start working to repave the cargo apron.

Next year, work on the main runway will include the installation of a so-called EMAS system consisting of hollow concrete blocks to slow an overshooting aircraft.

Vockner said two crews of 40 people worked in two shifts to get this summer's job done.

Luckily, the weather cooperated and work progressed on schedule.

NVFD responds to tundra fire

By Diana Haecker

Thursday morning, Oct. 16, the Nome Volunteer Fire Department responded to a tundra fire between town and Icy View. NVFD Fire Chief Jimmy West Jr. said an area of nearly 500 feet was affected by the fire

Firefighters suspect a vehicle backfire or faulty muffler on a 4-wheeler ATV using the trail between City Field and Nome-Beltz Highway set the dry tundra on fire. NVFD dispatched fire engine #7, carrying water. 16 firefighters responded to the call. Fire Chief West cautioned the Nome public to be mindful that the tundra is dry.

"It's been dry, but not abnormally dry," said National Weather Service meteorologist Robert Murder. By this time, normal precipitation would be measuring 1.08 inches but, so far, the NWS has measured only trace amounts of rain. Normally, Murders added, there would also be two inches of snowfall by now, but only trace amounts of snow have fallen.

vehicles to look for the men. Two planes piloted by Alaska Wildlife trooper Mike Cresswell and ADF&G biologist Tony Gorn flew along the West Beach/Cripple Creek area and the Kongarek Boad area.

area and the Kougarok Road area.
On Monday, Gorn found the two missing men traveling in one side-by-side on the Flambeau trail near the Kougarok Road, around mile 20. Gorn landed the airplane on the road and made sure the two were unharmed. Trooper Witrosky then drove to their location and made contact with McNally and Spencer near mile 12 of the Kougarok road. She said they were traveling in one side-by-side and were going home, looking forward to warm clothes and a hot shower.

Witrosky said the men stated that, while traveling on the Buster Creek trail to the Flambeau, one of their side-by-sides got stuck. Since it was getting dark, they decided to not continue home. According to Witrosky, the men had no sleeping bag or emergency gear with them. She reminds the Nome public to be prepared when going on outings and to file a trip plan with family or friends. West echoed the request. "When you embark on trips into the country, take necessary precautions to tell somebody where you are going and if you have a SPOT [emergency beacon], take it with you," West said.

• Graphite One

emceed the event, the meeting marked the beginning of what will be a long process on the road to possibly permit and build a graphite mine.

The company has already begun exploration drilling to define and confirm the resource.

Doug Smith explained that graphite comes in three forms—flake, amorphous and lump—and that they need to find out what form is present their mining claims, which sit on state and federal BLM land. The flake form would be most desirable because it offers the most diverse application of products that could be made from it: Lithium—lon batteries, aluminium anodes and fuel cells.

Scientists have discovered how to make graphene, a super strong, superbly conductive material that could be used in high tech electronics, car fuel cells or device batteries. If and when scientists figure out a way to produce it commercially, it still needs graphite material as a componemt.

Smith said the US imports all of its needed graphite. Graphite consumption has doubled since 2000 and it doesn't look like it will dip. China supplies 60 percent of the material to the world but its resource is depleting while taxes and costs are rising. If the Graphite One resource pans out, it would be the second largest deposit in the world and the largest US provider of graphite. Graphite One would supply materials for a growing market and provide jobs for locals.

Hembree, a geologist by training, recently joined Graphite One. He cautioned that the project team has yet to find out whether there is enough of the resource to make a mine profitable. He said the company has moved their campground from Salmon Lake to a campground near mile 50 between McAdams Creek and Tisuk River to cut down on helicopter costs to shuttle crew and equipment to the Graphite One site at the north slopes of the Kigluaik Mountains, near Imuruk Basin. Hembree said the crew consists of 25 workers, mostly from Anchorage and Wasilla, and a camp cook.

According the Hembree, they have conducted 9,000 feet of drilling. They use a 20-by-20 foot wooden pad to place the drill rig, use stream water out of Canyon Creek for drilling and reclaim the drill hole by capping it and replacing soil, vegetation and rocks. He said no chemicals are used in the drilling process.

This winter, they will conduct desktop wetland studies. They also will continue to conduct large core drilling samples for which DNR confirmed they have permits to cross Canyon Creek and use a track vehicle to transport a drill rig to their claims.

"We are still very early in the process so we don't have a road planned," Hembree said.

They are planning to do a resource evaluation, which will then flow into a document called a preliminary economic assessment. "We study the mineralization in the earth, how to develop the deposit and how to process it," he said. "Part of the document is to incorporate your involvement and that's why we're here."

Next year, the company will conduct additional exploration drilling, develop baseline samples, begin salmon and wildlife studies and try to raise more money to continue the exploration program.

Lack of information about the quality and quantity of the resource is the reason concrete plans are not yet on the table. From what Hembree can evaluate, there seems to be high grade graphite with mineralization near the surface, which would make for a low ratio of waste to ore.

Hembree speculated that the mine will a small open pit mine. "If we do have a mine here, we need to find a way to get the graphite processed and shipped out to market," he said.

If a mill is to be built near the mine, he said: "We will be open with you what kind of chemicals will be used in the floatation process."

This again alluded to NovaGold Resources not being upfront with the Nome public when the management team divulged the use cyanide in the floatation process at the Rock Creek mine only late in the permitting process. "Mining has a black eye here because of past mining operations here," Hembree said. "I was flabbergasted because I heard a lot of details today. I didn't know all that."

During the question and answer part of the meeting, people wanted to know what chemicals would be used in the process and how the graphite would be separated from the rock. Hembree said they don't know the process yet, that it will depend on the quality of the graphite and what product they will produce. Hembree said the winter drill expedition will determine what chemicals will be used in the floatation process. "The floatation process is well-known, you can look that up on the internet, but a lot of the chemicals used are proprietory," Hembree said.

They hope to move 500,000 tons annually.

According to DNR Large Mine project manager Jack DiMarchi, this marks a small production mine. "In comparison, Fort Knox moves that amount of rock in three days," Di-Marchi told the Nugget. The project team had no answers as to how much water they will need to use from the streams, if there will be tailings pond and tailings facility, how the hydrology will balance out and so on. "Next year, when the preliminary economic assessment is complete, we have a better idea," Doug Smith said.

Sue Steinacher wanted to know the location of their office in Nome. If there is an open door policy, one should know where the door is, she stated. She commented that Brevig Mission and Teller are the communities most likely to be affected and thus they should be the ones to gain the most from the project.

The only direct opposition came from a woman who asked how the product would be hauled out? "Are you going to build a road or haul it out through the channel? Either way, you're going to ruin our subsistence with the noise from mining, the animals will go away," she said. Smith countered that they don't know how to transport the product. "We will pick the most economical and most socially responsible option," Smith said.

Stan Okbaok Sr. commented that he was grateful that Graphite One had come to Nome and held the meeting. He said the animals might leave the area for a few years but then come back. "Roads and oil development have not affected the Slope: local people still hunt, fish and gather berries. There won't be impacts unless you really pollute the area," he said.

"I'm grateful that you have the desire to create the mine and jobs for our people."

The project team of Graphite One also met with the City, Bering Straits Native Corporation and Kawerak's subsistence as well as workforce training divisions. Meetings in Teller and Brevig Mission are scheduled for November.

Feds step up process for setting Norton Sound red king crab catch limits

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council is stepping up the process for setting annual catch limits for Norton Sound red king crab to better accommodate the commercial winter and summer fisheries.

The council approves the Overfishing Limit (OFL) and Acceptable Biological Catch (ABC) levels for the fisheries. The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game sets annual guideline harvest levels based on the OFL and ABC specifications approved by the council.

During a council meeting Oct. 10 in Anchorage, the Science and Statistical Committee submitted a new schedule for Norton Sound red king crab. The council's Crab Plan Team will hold a half-day meeting in January 2015 to propose final OFL and ABC specifications for the fishery following a three-day crab modeling workshop, and the SSC will submit final ABC and OFL recommendations to the council for approval in February 2015.

State regulations allow ADF&G to start the summer commercial open access fishery for Norton Sound red king crab by emergency order at any time after June 15. The department may open the Community Development Quota fishery by emergency order at any time.

Last June the council approved an OFL of 460,000 pounds and an ABC of 420,000 pounds for the 2014-15 Norton Sound red king crab fishery. The action was based on a recommendation from the SSC with the understanding that a full stock assessment would be available in January 2015 at a crab modeling workshop.

A Crab Plan Team report submitted to the council in October notes that the 2014 Norton Sound trawl survey conducted July 18-30 sampled only 47 stations, the lowest number on record, due to bad weather. "However, the survey resulted in the highest ever area-swept estimate (5.5 million crab), but with 50 percent of the catch from one station," the report states.

"The 2014 summer commercial fishery occurred from June 25 to Aug. 15, harvesting 129,926 crab with a catch per unit effort (1.23 crab/pot) that was higher than in 2013, but similar to the 2004-2013 average. Data on discards and tag recoveries are not yet analyzed."

The 2014 Norton Sound summer harvest totaled 389,008 pounds of red king crab (360,860 pounds in the open access fishery and 28,148 pounds in the Community Development Quota fishery), according to ADF&G's season summary. "The average price paid (including CDQ catch) was $5.12 per pound, the fourth highest amount ever paid," the report adds. "The exvessel value of the fishery (including CDQ) was $1.960 million, the fourth highest fishery value ever."

Norton Sound dredging study

The council is concerned about potential effects on Norton Sound red king crab from proposed development of deep draft port facilities in the area to support Arctic shipping

The CPT report to the council includes the following information from preliminary studies of Norton Sound port development presented at the team's September meeting in Seattle by Chris Hoffman, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Alaska District.

"Dredging during the course of construction at either the Nome or Port Clarence sites has the potential to generate up to 2 million cubic yards of material, which would necessitate siting and development of an ocean disposal site," reads the CPT report. "The need for the project is based on increasing foreign and domestic commercial vessel traffic through the Bering Strait (forecasted to reach 1,400 large commercial vessels per year by 2020) and needs associated with industrial resource development.'

Hoffman noted the project is in a feasibility study stage, advancement is two to three years away, and the project's scope and location depends on the results of economic feasibility and efficiency analysis.

Hoffman reported results of preliminary biological fieldwork at the potential Nome deep draft port site. Disposal of dredged material would not be allowed within three nautical miles from shore due to existing mining claims. Fieldwork has focused on potential sites 3 to 6.5 nautical miles from shore in 50 to 75 feet of water. Sites up to 15 nautical miles from shore and at greater depths are feasible, but costs would be significantly Fieldwork has begun at three locations at varying distances from shore. Six pots were soaked for 48 hours to collect fish and crab samples. The three sites produced from two red king crab per pot in the area closest to shore to 21 red king crab per pot at the location farthest from shore, along with some halibut and other crab species.

The CPT told Hoffman that trawl survey data available for areas off of both Nome and Port Clarence indicate there are greater concentrations of juveniles at different areas east and west of the proposed development sites.

Winter crab fishery

The Alaska Board of Fisheries has agreed to consider two proposals to change state regulations for Norton Sound's winter through-the-ice commercial red king crab fishery at a meeting scheduled March 17-20, 2015 at the Sheraton Hotel in Anchorage, reports Jim Menard, ADF&G area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue.

The proposals are among agenda change requests the board approved at a workshop held Oct. 15-16 in

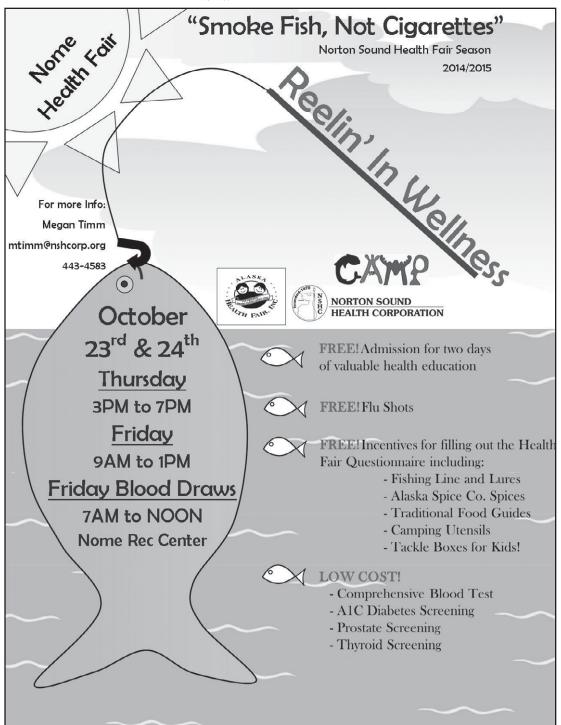

Proposal ACR 4 submitted by Adem Boeckmann of Nome asks the board to develop a guideline harvest evel for the winter fishery

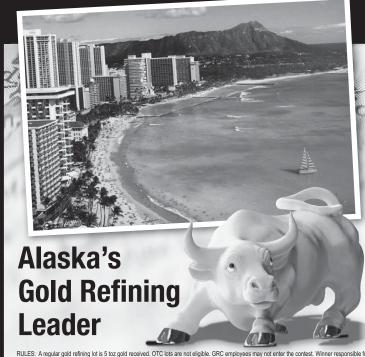

Proposal ACR 5 submitted by ADF&G seeks a change in the duration of the winter fishing season to be open by emergency order on or after January 15 and close April 30, unless extended by emergency order.

White Mountain neighbors reach out to help neighbors

By Dan Harrelson, White Mountain

Being physically challenged anywhere is hard enough as it is, but living in a small bush community in Alaska, the challenges one faces are even more so. White Mountain, with its many hills and graveled roads, makes it even more difficult for a person with limited mobility to get around.

Such is the case with our community member and friend Nate Simon. Nate was stricken with meningitis a few years ago. He was medivaced to Anchorage where he spent almost two years in the hospital and an assisted living facility. During this time his family never left his side. His father, Lincoln Simon stayed near Nate the entire time encouraging him to do the physical therapy. His mom Linda travelled down as frequently as she could to be with him and help with his care. Eventually, Nate was able to move up to the new hospital in Nome where family and friends were closer, but he still missed the beauty and his love of White Mountain. During this time Nate's family worked hard to bring him home. Finally, this past spring Nate happily came home. His mobility is still limited and he is confined to a wheel-chair, but our community is joyous that he is here. Nate's entire family is dedicated to his care.

This summer Nate and his family spent many days boating on the Fish River, cutting fish and just celebrating life. His smile radiates when he is out and about. Words are not needed to see how happy he and his family are now that they are all together. Moving Nate from point A to Z was still tough. Nate's was usually carried by either his dad, brother, or one or more of his three sisters down the stairs of their home stairs to his wheelchair to get him out of the house and at times, mom had the job by herself. They never complained or asked for help.

A seed of an idea was planted by my wife Luann to build a handicapped ramp for Nate to use. The seed was watered by many reminders and encouragements. A plan was made up and a notice posted throughout town requesting volunteers. The community response overwhelming. Over twenty men and women wanted to help with construction. Now the only obstacle was finding money for materials and freight costs. Calls were made and letters written and again the response was overwhelming.

Nome Grizzly/Outsiders owner Charlie Weiss agreed to give us the best deal he could on lumber and Ryan Air's Kenny Burnette and Boyuck Ryan had the lumber flown down at no cost. Boogles Johnson with the Housing Authority let us use tools and some material as well. Andy Haviland let us dig through some BSSD leftovers. Janis Ivanoff with Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation agreed to a donation as did the City of White Mountain. White Mountain could not have done this job without their generous help and we thank them very much.

This past week our volunteers showed up as promised. Lumber was sawed and it slowly came together. Nate's mom and sisters kept the crew in coffee and cake and cookies. A few thumbs were hammered and a lot of laughing but in two days we were finished. just in time for Nate's 32nd birthday. A beautiful deck and stairs were built and a ramp installed. It is not extravagant and not super big but it is done. AND it works!

When we started this endeavor I thought the ramp and deck were a good gift to Nate and his family, but the true gift was really of Nate to our community. Getting folks together and having them work together for something needed, not for a paycheck, but simply because it was needed, helps us to become a little closer. Watching Nate and his dad roll down that ramp for the first time made our day and his smile was truly priceless. Nate's has twin nieces, aged two, they call the ramp "the bridge." It really is.... a bridge to new found freedoms.

RAMPING IT UP—Nate Simon enjoys new ramp built by White Mountain neighbors. Friend Mike lends a hand.

His last regular session meeting was on September 16, held at the Anthony A. Andrews School in St. Michael. During the meeting, Weyiouanna received a plaque award in honor of his dedicated service. At another meeting later that day at the Tukurngailnguq School in Stebbins, BSSD celebrated his achievements with a celebratory cake.

Nome School Board bids farewell to Nickels, celebrates continued student successes

By Kristine McRae

At their regular meeting last Tuesday, Nome's Board of Education said farewell to long time board member and past board president Barb Nickels. Current president Betsy Brennan thanked Nickels for her hours of dedication to the children of Nome.

"Since 2008 Barb has helped Nome Public Schools in many ways, starting at the preschool," Brennan said, "She has always looked out for students and what is good for them." Nickels acknowledged her time in service as rewarding and teased, "Don't think I'm going away." She then joined the several constituents and witnessed the swearing in of new board member Brandy Arrington and renewing member Jennifer Reader.

The board also took time to elect officers and designate committee assignments. Betsy Brennan will continue as board president, Barb Amarok will hold the vice president position, and Jennifer Reader will continue as the secretary/treasurer. The school board welcomed this year's student representative, Jane Tidwell, who is a senior at Nome-Beltz. Jane will share duties with fellow student Oliver Hoogendorn to accommodate their busy sports and academic schedules.

In her first report to the board, Tidwell shared that the student council has already hosted two dances and that the gatherings have helped unify students and gave them the opportunity to get to know each other outside the classroom. At the request of several students, the council is also going to bring back the winter formal.

In her sports recap, Tidwell said that the volleyball team had just hosted a tournament to raise money for the Arctic Pinkies; the wrestling team had its first match in Bethel; some runners from Nome's cross country team were chosen to go to state. JROTC has been doing color guard for many of the games and also assisted at the local NRA ban-

Tidwell also shared that the student council would like to raise funds to support a student in Honduras to go to school. Called the "Dariana Project," Tidwell explained, "the program allows for a student to continue her schooling, which is not possible without the funds to pay for it. We would like to raise money; it would cost about $500 for one year."

Nome-Beltz teacher and Nome Education Association (NEA) vicepresident Kent Runion shared with the board that the focus of NEA for September and October has been to work on the new teacher evaluation and also to focus on improving the relationship with the community by focusing on engagement activities.

In his update to the school board, Nome-Beltz Principal Harlan Heinrich reported that there had been a lot of positive feedback from visiting teams about Nome players. This year's health fair organizers decided to expedite the series of tests offered by combining and grouping them so students could rotate through in one day. Nome-Beltz also conducted itsfirst lockdown drill. Heinrich said the students and staff "proceeded in good form."

Heinrich also introduced the first students of the month for the 2014-2015 school year. Junior high staff voted for Andrew Milligrock, and high school staff recognized Jane Tidwell. "There were a lot of candidates," Heinrich said, "and I surveyed the faculty at Nome-Beltz, and it was clear that these two should be recognized."

Kaley Overbey, who is one of two counselors at Nome-Beltz and serves as the community engagement advocate for the district, told the board she accompanied students to Unalakleet for a youth leadership retreat, and has arranged to meet monthly with the youth leaders for BSSD. Overbey also hosted a community night to connect Nome residents with resources that are available to youth. Feedback from local agencies was they would like this kind of event to happen more often. In addition to inviting Nome youth to attend elders committee meetings, Sitnasuak is also sponsoring some students to attend the Elders and Youth conference in Anchorage to talk about the kinds of Nome Elementary principal Paul Clark shared that Nome students made statewide news recently, including stories about the reading program and students pickling muktuk. "Our third graders are learning Eskimo dance in the classroom, Clark said, "and lots of positive things are happening here."

In a brief address to the board,

Nome parent John Tidwell described how valuable sports were to his kids, but suggested that students be given more time to keep up with their homework demands. "I think we spend too much energy with our children playing sports," Tidwell said, "We need to cut the sport week to four days a week and leave them time to work on their education. They take hard classes, burn the midnight oil, and it's really tough to keep up. The education will carry them farther."

After-school tutoring is now in place at both the elementary and Jr/Sr high schools, largely thanks to support from Nome Eskimo Community. School social worker Rochelle Bushey explained that any student is welcome to attend after school tutoring session, and that the parents of students who were failing one or more subjects were contacted and alerted to the extra support. "The numbers have been slowly going down," Bushey said, "which is actually good news because it means those students are bringing their grades up."

The appearance of termination dust on distant hills and mountains reminds us that our fall will soon have winter like weather. Those of you who have young ones traveling for school activities to neighboring villages, its time to dig out that winter gear. Full winter dress including; parka, insulated boots, gloves, insulated pants, and insulating headgear are required for cold weather travel.

Reading vs Gaming (video games). Research indicates that gaming, previously thought to improve fluid intelligence, showed little or no positive correlations to performance whilst reading did, particularly in memory and comprehension. It seems then, despite lack of a causal link, that reading may be more likely to enhance academic performance. With that, be sure to check out our book fair that will be held during Parent Conferences on October 30 -31.

The development of a responsible and productive citizenry requires the support and assistance of a number of agencies within our community. Most importantly it requires responsible parenting. As Parents and Guardians, you have an opportunity to team and partner with the people responsible for the academic growth of your child on October 30 and 31. I want to send a warm invitation to all you parents that have students here at Nome-Beltz School, to find the time to come out and meet with the teachers during our "Parent Conferences". The research shows that your child's academic growth improves with parent involvement.

2014-15 Snow Removal Policy & Procedures

City of Nome

Listed below are the prioritized actions that the City of Nome will undertake during the 2014-2015 snow season. These actions are meant as a guide and DO NOT commit the City to any course of action other than that which is deemed to be in the best interests of safety and City resources.

- situations
- Once the storm has abated, every effort will be made to open fire lanes (one lane) on every street in town.
- Once fire lanes have been established, crews will begin to open major (school bus) routes to two lanes of traffic. Streets identified as priority are * East and West 5th Ave. * West 1st Ave. * West 2nd Ave. * West E Street * East K Street * Icy View Loop * East N Street.
- Once major routes have been opened to two lanes of traffic, crews will begin opening the remaining streets to two lanes of
- Once the streets have been opened to two lanes of traffic, crews will systematically begin to widen, clean and haul snow to designated snow storage sites. Service areas will be rotated in order that all areas of town receive equal treatment during this
- Sanding of select streets will be performed by ADOT and the City. Other streets will be sanded when conditions warrant and resources allow.
- VII. The major snow storage for the City of Nome will be: the snow storage site located off Greg Kruschek Avenue.

Once again these plans are meant as a guide. We will take actions contrary to this plan as necessary. We urge citizens of Nome to help us keep the streets safe and usable. Some things that will help our efforts are:

- Cars should be parked off the rights-of-way as much as possible during the clearing and removal of snow;
- Obstructions (buildings, dog houses, snow machines, 4-wheelers, trash boxes, etc.) that prevent removal of snow should be moved farther on to private property if at all possible;
- Be alert to the area of town in which we are working and, if at all possible, keep parked cars and traffic to a minimum in these areas.
- Pushing of snow into the public right-of-way during a storm, and after a street has been cleared, is not allowed.

After hours, on the weekends and holidays, City crews will be on-call as needed. Due to the limited resources within the City, local contractors will be utilized to provide additional manpower and equipment as necessary. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact the Public Works Roads Department at 443-6640. Thank you!

Schmidt's NCU Beacons rank fourth in NAIA cross country running

By Keith Conger

During the first part of August, the southern Seward Peninsula was experiencing, by its standards, a veritable heat wave with temperatures solidly in the upper 50's and 60's. Recent Nome-Beltz graduate and cross country running standout Rosa Schmidt had spent the summer faithfully following the workouts given to her by her upcoming Northwest Christian University Beacons running coach. She was almost comfortably surviving the rare, hot, western Alaska weather. "One day it was 72 and I got pretty hot while running, and I thought to myself, 'Oh, man, I'm going to be toast in the lower 48 heat," recalled Schmidt in a recent mid-season interview.

The four-time Region 1 North cross country running champion arrived in Oregon on August 13th for a pre-season NCU cross country team running camp. She was greeted by Coach Heike McNeil, 14 other super-fit women, and daunting thermometer readings in the mid-90's. The temperatures were not the only sizzling-hot thing Schmidt found at her new Eugene, Oregon college. The fiery Lady Beacon runners, at the start of the season, had been voted one of the top-25 teams in the nation by the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) coaches for 41 consecutive weeks, dating back to August 25, 2010. Prior to the 2014 season, the Beacons had been in the actual top-25 for 34 consecutive weeks and had held a top-ten ranking in all but six of those polls.

That standing might be overwhelming for any incoming freshman, especially a small-town girl

Nome Nanook Swimmers compete at the Valley Invitational Swim Meet

By Kirsten Bey, Swim Coach

Nome-Beltz swimmers Lacy Erickson (senior), Kurtis Bushey (freshman) and Madison Johnson (freshman) were part of 284 swimmers from 16 schools competing in 22 different events in the 2014 Valley Invitational Swim Meet.

Erickson, finishing out her high school swimming career, came in 20th out of 49 swimmers in the 50yard freestyle. This was just threethirds of a second out of a finals position. She also finished 20th out of 45 swimmers in the 100-yard freestyle event.

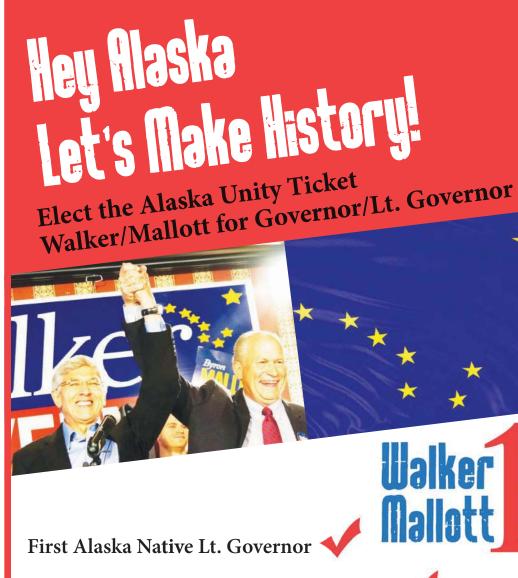

Johnson swam the 50-yard freestyle, finishing 38th out of 49 swimmers in her first high school swim meet. Her second event was the 100-yard breaststroke. She finished first place in her heat outtouching the second place finisher by .01 of a second and 28th out of 35 total swimmers.

Kurtis Bushey participated in his first competitive swim event. He swam the 50-yard freestyle and 100-yard freestyle. Prior to this season, Kurtis had never done a racing start, but he did the school proud with a picture-perfect dive. Unfortunately, he left the starting block a fraction of a second too early on his 100-yard freestyle and was disqualified for a false start. However, he did not realize he was disqualified and swam the event, which provided coaches with his time and the possibility to continue to work on bettering his results.

The Valley and Kenai Peninsula schools use this meet as a trial run for their regional meet. Many of these schools have real powerhouse swimming programs. It was encouraging that the Nome swimmers were not intimidated by the numbers of swimmers in the other programs and that they can hold their own against many of these other swimmers.

The swim team has one more week of practice before the regional finals meet takes place in Fairbanks on October 31 and November 1.

Lady Nanooks take 3rd at Delta Invitational Volleyball Tournament

By Keith Conger

How do you work a 10-team round-robin volleyball format into one day? With speed.

During Friday's pool play at the Tenth Annual Delta Invitational Volleyball Tournament in Delta, Alaska, a whopping 45 "matches" were held. Of course, this would have been an impossible task if the teams had played best-of-five regulation contests. The Delta folks were able to pull this off by opening up two courts and having teams play on another in single, hectic, winner-takeall sets to 25 points. Matches started every half hour.

The Nome-Beltz girls team experienced this fast and furious format over the weekend. They made a strong showing during the roundrobin action and advanced into the championship division on Saturday. This led to a third place finish over-

The Nanook girls ended day one with a 7 - 2 record against mainly 3A competition from around the state. They fell only to the Valdez Buccaneers and regional foes the Kotzebue Huskies. They were able to defeat the Delta Huskies, the Houston Wildcats, the Galena Hawks, the Bethel Warriors, the Lathrop Malemutes JV squad, and both the Eielson Lynx varsity and junior varsity units.

Nanooks coach Lucas Frost said by email that the best part of Friday night was the come-from-behind victory against the talented squad from Eielson. In that set, senior Alyssa Bushey served six points in a row to end the single-set match.

On Saturday, the double elimination championship play was extended to best-of-three set matches. The second-seeded Nanooks opened the day against the third-seeded team from Eielson but this time the results were in the Lynx' favor. The loss to Eielson put the Nome girls in the loser's bracket where they met up with the fifth-seeded Warriors. The Nanooks were able to take care of their familiar Western Conference challengers, eliminating them from play. This victory, coupled with a second loss of the day to Eielson, positioned the Nome girls for a 3rdplace consolation match with the rival Kotzebue squad. The Huskies had beaten Bethel, but had fallen to top-seeded Valdez. According to Frost, this was the match the team really needed to win.

The girls lost the first set to Kotzebue but kept their poise to take the second. At one point in the decisive, 15-point third set the Huskies held a four-point lead. It seems when the Nanooks need points, Renee Merchant comes to the rescue. The senior with ice water in her veins served nine consecutive points to make up the disadvantage, leading her team to victory. The Merchant and Bushey families may need to extend their trophy cases, as both girls were named to an all-tournament team for the second week in a row.

According to Frost, 3A Valdez was playing at a 4A level. They went on to defeat the Lynx in the championship match with no defeats in the

The trip to central Alaska brought mixed emotions to Nanooks senior Jane Tidwell, who had transferred to Nome-Beltz mid-way through her junior year. The Nanook's tenacious middle hitter played for Eielson from 7th grade through 11th grade. She became a starter for the Lynx during her junior year. Tidwell has embraced the new rivalries in the Western Conference, especially with Kotzebue, and was pleased to have eliminated them from the Delta Tournament. "When we played Kotzebue we knew we needed to get some work done," she said.

Two weeks before the Western Conference Meet in Nome, Frost says the Nanooks squad is really coming together as a team. They hope to beat the Huskies twice in Bethel next weekend so the Nanooks can secure the number one seed in the conference.

Alaska's Western Conference is made up of 3A schools from Nome. Kotzebue, Bethel, and Barrow. Nome will be sending two teams to the 3A state volleyball tournament in Anchorage on the weekend of November 13 - 15. The Nome-Beltz Nanooks are two-time defending Western Conference champions.

THE 2014 NWC BEACONS WOMENS CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING TEAM - Nome's Rosa Schmidt was a four-time top-ten Alaska state runner. Last spring she accepted an athletic scholarship to attend Northwest Christian University to participate on the cross country running team. The recent Nome-Beltz grad's college team was ranked fourth in the country in a recent NAIA coaches' poll.

moving to a metropolitan area of over 350,000 - essentially 100 times larger than Nome.

Schmidt however, has handled the pressure (and the heat) by routinely being the fifth or sixth highest finisher on her team in each of its meets. She has become the top-rated freshman on the squad, typically finishing the races 20 - 30 seconds ahead of the next highest ranked first-year Beacons runner. Schmidt has become a compliment to the trio of Alyssa Harmon, Shea Vallaire and Sierra Brown, who routinely flip flop spots as the top three finishers in the group. The team started the season undefeated in four meets and have risen to fourth in the nation, the highest ranking in the program's his-

Sophomore Harmon has the fastest time on the team this year, running the standard, 5-kilometer (3.1 mile) cross country course in Salem, Oregon in 18 minutes, five seconds. Schmidt has not been far behind. She ran her fastest race in Portland, Oregon in a time of 19 minutes, 1 second. That effort was 47 seconds better than her fastest race at an Alaskan state meet.

"Yesterday I ran in 80 degrees and I didn't feel like I was going to pass out," said Schmidt, who is quickly adapting to the heat and the increased mileage her new training program demands. "But, I am looking forward to the rain." The other thing Schmidt is looking forward to is the NAIA nationals in Lawrence.

Kansas. Last year, the thermometer at the national meet there read 10 degrees above zero. Schmidt figures a repeat of those type temperatures would give her, the only Alaskan Beacon, an advantage. She did, after all, qualify for Team Alaska's cross country snowshoe racing squad at the 2010 Arctic Winter Games by running a time trial along the Bering Sea when the thermometer read minus 18.

Rosa Schmidt is determined to continue her running success as she studies elementary education at the small university that is home to less than 1000 students. She especially appreciates the NCU student/teacher ratio of 7 - 1. She enjoys being in Eugene, which is also known as "Track Town, USA."

Museum and Library Commission ponders design for Richard Foster Building's Interior

By Sarah Miller

Discussion at last Wednesday's meeting of the Museum and Library Commission focused on color schemes and materials for the Richard Foster building's interior. Commission members were most concerned about the color of ceiling tiles and lighting used to create an atmosphere that would enhance the artifacts that will be on display.

"Lighting is very theatrical," explained Richard Beneville, noting the use of dark colored ceiling tiles and lighting. "On a stage, there's a reason why backstage areas are dark. It makes everything disappear except that which we want the audience to see. Lighting in museums is theater in a sense." The use of lighting and display adds drama to the exhibit areas that will draw visitors into the museum and galleries.

In contrast, lighting in the library portion of the building will be significantly brighter. "The foot-candle difference in the library is significant. It needs to be because it will be lit for reading, whereas the museum will be lighted to enhance the artifact displays," explained Karen Zaccaro, architect from ECI/Hyer of Anchorage. Charlie Lean expressed concern that the brighter lighting in the library would draw visitors away from the museum exhibits, but the group consensus was that the objects on display and the exhibit design would be equally enticing to visitors.

The committee members were in agreement that the choice of materials for ceiling tile, flooring, and wall color should reflect the natural environment of Nome. A combination of dark colored carpeting as well as reclaimed weathered teak wood has been selected for its simple maintenance, durability, and noise-reducing

The teak wood brings to mind the weathered look of driftwood found on Nome's beaches and blends with the content of the museum exhibits. The committee's attention to detail even extended to floor tile choices for the restrooms. They will feature sand-colored tiles that are speckled with blues, greens, and even some reds to bring to mind the sea glass found along the beach. As far as ceiling tiles go, the design firm initially presented dark charcoal-colored tiles, but Beneville suggested a blue to recall Nome's night sky. "I would like to see the ceiling in a deep blue because we have that in our sky most of the year," he commented.

The design firm will send more samples for the group to consider at future meetings. The selection of paint, floor tile, carpet, and ceiling tile colors will be an ongoing process. The group will meet again to prepare bid packages, which can be completed without specific colors selected as long as the materials have been chosen. The commission continues to work on its ongoing review and selection of artifacts for the museum's exhibits.

Calm weather and the slow freezing of the inner harbor marks the end of the sailing season for Nome. Harbormaster Lucas Stotts attended the annual AAHPA (Alaska Association of Harbormasters and Port Administrators) conference in Ketchikan last week. Stotts said the event is an annual meeting that allows all Harbormasters and Port Administrators throughout the state the chance to meet one another and network on issues their facilities may have and seek assistance from other facilities that have already had or still have these same problems and to help find solutions. He said it was very beneficial to see how other harbors are structured and how they work to pursue additional funding opportunities to bring facility upgrades to Nome. In harbor traffic, Stott reported the following: On Oct. 14, the landing craft Nunaniq departed with village freight. On Oct. 15 many gold dredges hauled out of the water to prepare for winter storage. No movement was recorded on Oct. 16 or 17. On Oct. 18, the research vessel Westward Wind arrived in Nome to unload gear and for a crew change. On Oct. 19, the Westward Wind departed south for the season.

Saying it Sincerely

By: James Ventress From: Nome Covenant Church A member of the Nome Ministerial Association How Will We Be Ruled?

There's no escaping the cold reality; the facts are evident in our gray skies and the thermometer. Winter is near again. We all have our coping mechanisms (or vices) for dealing with the cold and darkness; some of them are greatly preferable to others. The addition of PFD checks to our bank accounts is another indicator of the season and it may be that the way we use that money is also an indicator of how we deal with the challenges of winter. A little bit of retail therapy may not be the absolute worst thing for us but I read Chief's Notes and The Seawall enough to know the potential damage some coping mechanisms can have for our families and communities.

The real problem isn't the PFD or even money. The real issue is what types of controls do we place upon ourselves while we enjoy our freedom and liberty. English literary critic and author G.K. Chesterton made this clear for us back at the turn of the Twentieth Century. He said that all worthwhile and lasting human satisfaction and joy are conditional. It all hangs on one word: IF. From our earliest childhoods we will have (hopefully) learned this truth. If you will eat all of your vegetables, you may have dessert. It is even so in our fairy tales. Cinderella may go to the ball and ride in a coach, if she will only be home by midnight. It was no use asking why must I eat my vegetables or for Cinderella to ask why she must be home by midnight. The follow up questions might be, why should there be any dessert at all? Or, why should she even go to the ball?

We have freedom, liberty, joy and pleasure but some sort of restraint is always placed upon the positive experiences of life. The problems come if we don't recognize the restraint or when we resent the expectation of self-restraint. Our jail and the Nome Youth Facility are necessary reminders and enforcers of external restraint. If we will not have internal discipline then there must be external discipline. This goes contrary to our egos and democratic American lifestyle, but the hard reality is that humans were made to be ruled by something or someone. We can be ruled from within ourselves or we can be ruled from outside ourselves, but we will be ruled.

When I was a substitute teacher, I sometimes had students who struggled with the need to follow school rules or treat other students appropriately. My offer (in this order) was for them to find a solution, for us to find a solution, for me to find a solution or for the principle to find a solution. It is the same way for adults. Some people are ruled by their addictions, some consistently rule their self, and some get their ruling from the judge and then they are ruled by four hard walls.

Self control, as one of the Fruits of the Spirit (evidence of the power and presence of God in our lives) is admirable and necessary but the best thing to be ruled by is Love. Galatians 3:23 tells us that the inflexible law that stands over us is a guardian or tutor, until the perfect law of love that comes from Jesus is established in our life. As we live our lives in all seasons, let us be humble and wise enough to be sheltered under that law which is lightest and easiest: the law of love from Jesus Christ.

NSEDC soliciting recipes and photos for Norton Sound Seafood Cookbook

Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation put out a call for recipes and photos for a cookbook featuring dishes made from Norton Sound seafood. Norton Sound residents have until Friday October 31, 2014 to make submissions for the cookbook slated for completion in time for the holiday season.

"Our fisheries are like no other in the world. Norton Sound residents have the most experience and the most unique ways of preparing salmon, crab, halibut and the resources from our ocean waters," NSEDC Chairman Dan Harrelson said. "A majority of our residents have harvested and prepared Norton Sound river and ocean resources their entire lives. This cookbook will serve as a small-but significant-way to celebrate our vibrant food and culture.'

The Norton Sound Seafood Cookbook will be available for sale at the Norton Sound Seafood Center in Nome and through the online retail store NortonSoundSeafood.com. The seafood center sells Norton Sound salmon, red king crab and halibut, along with food items that may be difficult to find in Nome. "We have prime seafood available from the Norton Sound, in the Norton Sound," said the Norton Sound Seafood Center's Justin Noffsker. "We're really excited to share the richness of the lifestyle and family traditions showcased through the simple beauty of this cookbook. We live in a great place and through the photos and recipes collected from our very own neighbors and friends, residents will have the opportunity to exhibit the richness of our lifestyles in the Norton Sound.'

Norton Sound residents interested in submitting a recipe and/or photos for the Norton Sound Seafood Cookbook can find guidelines and a submission form on our website at www.nsedc.com or from their community liaison. Residents with submissions used for the Norton Sound Seafood Cookbook will receive a free cookbook upon publication in December.

NOTICE OF AVAILABILITY

Final Environmental Assessment and Finding of No Significant Impact for United States Coast Guard "Arctic Operations and Training Activities" in 2014

The U.S. Coast Guard proposes to conduct a group of activities, known as "Arctic Shield 2014", in the Arctic region in 2014. These activities would provide an air, surface, and shore-side U.S. Coast Guard presence in the Arctic to meet U.S. Coast Guard mission requirements. The U.S. Coast Guard has finalized an Environmental Assessment (EA) pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) that evaluates a Preferred Alternative and the No Action Alternative, and provides information and comparative analyses of U.S. Coast Guard activities in the Arctic region. Based on the analysis in the EA, the U.S. Coast Guard has signed a Finding of No Significant Impact for the Preferred Alternative to conduct "Arctic Shield 2014" activities in the Arctic.

The final EA and Finding of No Significant Impact are available for review online at http://www.uscg.mil/D17, or copies may be requested from Mike Dombkowski, U.S. Coast Guard, Civil Engineering Unit Juneau, P.O. Box 21747, Juneau, Alaska, 99802-1747, or by email to michael.g.dombkowski@uscg.mil.

This is a notice of unclaimed capital credits for members of record of Alaska Village Electric Cooperative (AVEC).

AVEC hereby now gives notice that capital credit payments are now and have been available since June 14, 2001 at the office of the Cooperative at 4831 Eagle Street Anchorage, Alaska 99503, to its members.

Thousands of checks and letters were returned as undeliverable or checks remain uncashed. This emphasizes the need for members to provide AVEC with a forwarding address when they leave the system – and to keep AVEC apprised of future address changes until all accumulated capital credits have been returned.

Even if their checks were returned as undeliverable or have not been cashed, former members or their estates may still claim their capital credits. AVEC's website contains a list of 3,248 members or former members who are still due capital credits. Please visit www.avec.org, click on the "Money For You" menu option and review this list for your name.

If your name appears on the list, or if you have information that may help AVEC locate someone listed, please fill out the online form and return it to:

Capital credits from these retirements which have not been claimed by April 30, 2015 will revert to Alaska Village Electric Cooperative. If you have questions, please call AVEC at 800-478-1818.

Begich pushes for more training, better enforcement of protocols to prevent spread of Ebola in U.S.

Expanded health screenings at international airports should include Anchorage

Demanding a more cohesive strategy to battle the Ebola virus and protect Americans from further exposure, U.S. Senator Mark Begich today welcomed news that President Obama has appointed a pointperson to coordinate U.S. efforts. Begich is also pushing for better outreach to the public and more training and resources for health care providers.

"After my briefing earlier (last) week with the CDC, it became clear to me that stronger action in the form of better protocols, and the enforcement of those protocols is absolutely necessary," said Begich. "An infectious disease outbreak requires multi-agency and departmental coordination and that is why I'm am pleased the President has appointed a so-called czar to help make sure we are focused on preventing an outbreak in the U.S., containing the epidemic in West Africa, responding to suspected domestic cases, and preparing to respond should the disease spread on our shores.

In letter to President Obama today Begich expressed grave concern about recent reports of the mishandling of Ebola patients in Dallas. Begich, who will talk with nurses in Fairbanks today about their level of training with infectious disease protocols, called on the Centers for Disease Control to provide clear direction to providers and public health departments around the country, including updated quarantine procedures and health care worker safety protocol.

"The CDC and other relevant agencies must provide the necessary education, training, and resources to our health care workers and facilities, to include sanitation workers and support staff, ensuring they are equipped to respond in the small chance there is a local case of Ebola," said Begich. 'Our brave health care workers are on the front lines of this response. We must do everything we can to provide them with appropriate training and fail-safe protective equipment.

Begich also urged the President to continue to assess current West Africa travel policies and to consider sensible travel restrictions and expanded health screenings at international airports, such as Anchorage, to help contain the outbreak in West Africa and prevent the spread in the U.S. During a briefing with CDC officials earlier this week Begich pressed the CDC to have Ebola test kits, which are currently only being distributed to high risk areas, available in Alaska as a precautionary meas-

Building Inspector Greg Smith presented the concept of vacant property registration. It is a remedy advocated by a non-profit organization called Center for Community Progress. Smith said unsafe buildings are a major issue in Nome. "Our old abatement strategy had not had the desired results," he said. He said has been in touch with the Center for Community Progress for three months to try to develop an ordinance to help the city permit legal registration of vacant properties and houses and to encourage standards for upkeep and maintenance of buildings and lots.

Smith said a particular problem in Nome is that many properties are stuck in probate and estate confusion. When an owner dies, it is often discovered there are several people listed in the will and on the actual deed. In such cases, there is often no common goal for sharing or disposal of the property. In other cases, bank foreclosure are in process but are backlogged.

By the time properties get to the auction block, they have deteriorated due to the lack of maintenance and upkeep. Smith recognized that, while Nome has a severe housing crunch, it also has many lots filled with vacant and decaying buildings that are a blight to the city at best, a public safety hazard at worst. He stated that he has the authority to order the destruction of a building declared a public nuisance, he is reluctant to do so.

He worries about hazards his crews may face and insurance coverage for them. The proposed vacant property registration, if adopted, would allow the city to engage property owners, help them to identify and clarify titles and would encourage preservation of property value by a minimum of maintenance.

Other tables overflowed with flood zone maps and maps depicting zoning details in the city of Nome.

Other results of the zoning survey addressed dusty roads, "private" junkyards filled with dysfunctional vehicles ( cars, snowmachines and ATVs), dog feces on streets and sidewalks; the problem of unattended and roaming dogs; the need for green spaces and public parks and other measures to beautify Nome.

2014 AFN Convention calls out to Rise as One

By Diana Haecker

In a call for unity, the 2014 Alaska Federation of Natives convention took place under the banner "Rise as One" at the Dena'ina Civic and Convention Center in downtown Anchorage last week. Over 5,000 Alaska Native delegates from all over Alaska gathered at the annual convention to hear from Native leaders, from federal and state politicians and from gubernatorial and senatorial candidates for the upcoming elections on New 4

One of the major messages at the convention was the importance for Natives to exercise their right to vote. During a short presentation on that message, Willie Hensley of Kotzebue encouraged voters to hit the polls. He threw t-shirts into the

The convention got off to a rocky start when Anchorage Mayor Dan Sullivan – also candidate in the Lt. Governor's race on Sean Parnell's ticket – failed to appear on stage to welcome AFN to Anchorage. Mayor Sullivan was scheduled to give his greeting following an opening message from a Dena'ina Elder. An AFN co-chair bridged the awkward moment by calling the next speaker to the stage, Fairbanks Mayor John Eberhart. Eberhart recognized this year's motto "Rise as One" by saying, "We are a diverse multi-cultural community, but we work best when we work together." To that end, he noted he had created a diversity council to advise the city of Fairbanks and the Northstar Borough on cultural diversity issues and to create a diversity action plan.

After Eberhart, Sullivan showed up to give his belated welcome speech.

Council mum on marijuana issue

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council refused 5-0 Monday to say how they felt—yay or nay—on the state ballot question on legalizing the use of marijuana.

When Mayor Denise Michels' resolution came up for a vote on opposing Ballot Measure #2 to allow the commercialization and industrialization of recreational marijuana in Alaska, Councilman Matt Culley made a motion to protest the placement of the question on the Council's agenda, seconded by Councilman Jerald Brown.

It was no one's beeswax how individual Council members would vote on the issue, Culley said, and got unanimous agreement from Councilmembers Brown, Stan Andersen, Louis Green Sr., and Randy Pomeranz, whose votes effectively knocked the resolution off the table.

It was not the Council's job to tell people how to vote, Culley declared. In this country voting is a private matter and they should not be asked how they planned to vote on Election Day.

During comments Nome Police Chief John Papasodora applauded the Council for planning to quash a liquor license application.

Then he handed out a warning on the Council's failure to take a stand on the legalization of recreational use of marijuana and the ills he felt it would bring after having studied the

AFN: Candidates debate Alaska issues

By Diana Haecker

During the Alaska Federation of Natives convention in Anchorage last week the forum hosted two political debates on Friday afternoon. Incumbent U.S. Senator Mark Begich, a Democrat, debated Republican candidate Dan Sullivan, former Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources Commissioner and former Dept. of Justice Attorney General.

In a later debate, incumbent Governor Sean Parnell debated Independent challenger Bill Walker. Walker and winner of the Democratic primary Byron Mallott have merged their campaigns, with Walker running for Governor and Mallott running for Lt. Governor.

Senatorial debate

Begich and Sullivan were first allowed a one-minute introduction.

Dan Sullivan introduced himself as a Lieutenant Colonel of the U.S. Marine Corps Reserves and talked about his immediate family, his wife, three daughters and his wife's prominent

Letters -

Dear Editor,

Thank you for continuing to print your newspaper. It is so important to keep current with happenings in our communities.

Our rural communities depend on the mail service for just about everything...eggs, milk, tea coffee motor parts, fishing gear, medicine, and much more. Not many in bigger towns and cities can imagine depending on their mail system as much as we do. So while it might not seem like a very big deal to them to cut the bypass mail system, it would completely devastate us here. Luckily, when that almost happened a couple of years ago, Senator Mark Begich, along with the rest of our delegation, stood up for us. He told the Postmaster General what I just explained and told him point blank we deserve the right to affordable mail just like everyone else, no matter how far off the road system we might be. For that we owe him a huge thank you.

Shortly after Begich advocated for postal rates for rural communities, a friend of mine told me of an experience at a post office in a major service center. The postal worker quoted a price that was very high. The friend reminded the postal worker of Senator Begich's advocacy for small rural communities' mail rates. A more reasonable price was charged and paid.

Senator Mark Begich not only supports small communities but also supports all of our supply service centers through advocating for improvements such as new hospitals, new schools, and, yes, the bypass mail system that helps all Alaskans. Whether its protecting our wild salmon supply by stopping Frankenfish anyway he can or fight-

Best picks for western Alaskans

This coming election is pivotal for our nation. Will we have to endure continued obstructionist tantrums? Will big bucks buy votes? Does big money scream at our process of logic and common sense? We will find out next Wednesday morning.

We will find out next Wednesday morning.

It is critical that western Alaskans get to the polls. Bush Alaska and all of the residents of our cities, towns and villages need to beat feet to the voting booths. It's important for us to elect politicians who will protect and champion the cultural and environmental issues precious to our quality of life. The best would be to keep Sen. Mark Begich in office. He knows our concerns and can work across political differences. Walker and Mallott are the team for Governor and Lt. Governor. They know the people and are not controlled by big business interests. Forest Dunbar should be our new man in Congress. He has a keen understanding of the issues that concern rural Alaska, and frankly, Don Young is just plain out of touch with what is important to Alaskans.

There are ballot issues to consider and we should examine each with care and concern for far reaching impact. One thingt is certain—if we stay at home and let the other guy vote we will get what we deserve. All eligible voters need to get out to vote. Western Alaska has influence and muscle. Let's use it at the polls.— N.L.M.—

FALL STORM— The first fall storm of the season whipped up the Bering Sea on Sunday, Oct. 26.

Op-Ed: Week of the Arctic a success

By Nils Andreassen

The Institute of the North is very happy with the results from our 2014 Week of the Arctic, held this year in Nome, Kotzebue and Barrow. The response – and the welcome! – we received to holding this in those communities was overwhelming. Involving the leaders from the region in conversations about the region, while in the region, was meaningful, productive and successful.

Throughout the week we described this process as a mixing zone, whereby local expertise and perspectives saw mutual enrichment through interaction with outside knowledge and interests. Being able to see and hear firsthand the resources and challenges in each community, it's clear to see an imperative for action by national and international decision-makers, who must move forward in lockstep with local leaders who ably express the region's

That's not to suggest that national interests are subsumed by local; only that through consultation, cooperation and collaboration true partnership is reached. We were impressed by federal participation in the Week of the Arctic and the transformation that occurred as officials heard from the Arctic's residents and responded in new and different ways. For many, this was also their first visit to these communities. That's critical as the U.S. moves into next year's role as Chair of the Arctic Council.

One of the takeaways, after some reflection, is how difficult it is to separate or integrate the personal and physical with the political and geopolitical. In preparing for the U.S. Chairmanship, how can Alaskans effectively describe what is "home" as it relates to the interests of eight nations? Alaska has an opportunity to put its best foot forward, demonstrating rich natural and human resources, effective governance, and strong leadership.

The priorities that we heard expressed within the region, and especially the commitment to protecting food security and healthy subsistence resources, are easily translated to international concern. There was also a clear desire to see benefit accrue to the people who live closest to increasing change and activity. The delicate balance between risk and reward must be struck in moving forward, which we saw the potential for during the Week of the Arctic.

In approaching future policy, whether shaping (at the Arctic Council) or making (nationally), we cannot forget that the people of the U.S. Arctic are capable of responding to that potential. Throughout the Week we saw demonstrated in all three regions the fact that local leaders and experts bring an abundance of knowledge, experience and assets to the table. They will know best how to understand and manage risk, as well to work with government and industry to leverage opportunity.

We want to again thank Mayor Charlotte Brower, Mayor Reggie Joule and Mayor Denise Michels for welcoming us to their communities. At the same time, we appreciate the community, tribal and business leaders who participated throughout, and the state and federal officials who at-

We look forward to future events that build off this Week of the Arctic experience. We plan, during the 'years of the Arctic" of the U.S. Chairmanship, to host Alaska Arctic Policy Tours, bringing circumpolar visitors to Alaska's Arctic communities, thereby grounding them in the reality, richness and responsibility that comes with living in, subsisting from, and operating within America's Arctic.

We will continue to work with Alaska's Arctic communities and leadership on this and other Institute of the North initiatives. Together we will see an Arctic whose people are respected, where the balance between economic development and traditional ways of living is struck in partnership with all rightsholders.

If the voters approved Ballot Measure #2, "it would not be good for the State of Alaska," he said.

Smoking a little weed at home was one thing, but legalization in terms of the ballot measure coming up Nov. 4 would put marijuana shops on street corners and accessible to youth.

The cost to communities in testing police officers, school bus drivers, work forces, and the like would by far outweigh benefits of garnering marijuana tax for the state's budget, Papasodoras told the Council. There would be more marijuana shops than liquor stores, based on legalization in other states, with vendors making money that would outshine the $15 million in taxes going into the state's budget, he said—and none of the money would be coming to Nome.

The Council voted 4-1 to protest the transfer of a liquor license from Stanley Sobocienski (deceased) to Balassa Sobocienski, citing a report from Chief Papasodora on the high incidence of police involvement and social costs of alcohol abuse to the community. The liquor license in question used to cover the Bering Sea Saloon.

"If it were up to me, I'd oppose every one of them that comes up," Brown said.

The state Alcoholic Beverage Control Board advertises liquor license applications so that governing bodies can protest them if they like. Commenting on the approval of a recent application for another liquor license, Councilman Stan Andersen said it should have been protested.

"Now we have a new one [liquor establishment] when we could have quashed it," Andersen said.

The Council voted to send a protest to the state on the Sobocienski license transfer, 5-1 with Green casting the "no" vote.

The Nome Port Commission responded to a request from the Council to prioritize improvements associated with the Snake River Bridge project.

The bridge has presented turning radius issues where it joins the Seppala Drive.

The Port Commission summarized its recommendations and listed them in order of priority. At the top of the list is realigning Center Creek Road to meet Jafet Road at Seppala Drive. Next came realignment of Doyle Road to (a.) meet Center Creek Road at Bypass Road: (b.) Direct to Center Creek Dr., to eliminate curve where Doyle Road meets existing Center Creek Road. Third, to provide sufficient radius at the intersection of Jafet Road and Seppala Drive and at the future intersection of the realigned Center Creek Road and Seppala Drive to allow turning movements of 25-ft tractors and 40-ft. long trailers without crossing into the opposite lane.

Since the opening of the new Snake River Bridge, the long tractortrailer sets had been using the new and the old Snake River Bridges alternately to enter and exit the port area to use the best turning radius.

However, last month, crews tore out the old Snake River Bridge. This cut the options in half for truck drivers wanting to avoid the cramped turning radius off the new Snake River Bridge onto Seppala Drive.

NJUS has improved lighting in the bridge area as requested by the Nome Planning Commission and approved by the Council

The state DOT design and engineering department has commented on the suggested improvements, cautioning the Council concerning funding constraints and the impacts of certain right-of-way acquisitions, the cost of which would cut into construction funding.

The Council will put the bridge improvements on the funding priority lists Council awarded the bid for fuel delivery for the City of Nome to the lone responsive bidder, Bonanza Fuel, Inc. Bonanza will supply heating oil #1 at $5.38 per gallon; equipment diesel fuel, $5.38 per gallon; vehicle unleaded gasoline, $5.29 per gallon; and vehicle diesel fuel, $5.38.

John Handeland, utilities manager, said in his report that NJUS would retain a rate analyst pursuant to adjusting electric rates. NJUS has adjusted the rates for water and sewer services, but "power rates have not been adjusted since 1995," Handeland said. The fuel surcharge covers the cost of fuel, but not the cost of inflation, Handeland said.

Andersen commented that the people who had taken care of Nome Cemetery had retired from City employment, that instead of getting services free from them and volunteers, the City would have to pay someone for the services.

That added up to having to charge for burial sites "to cover our costs."

Later that day, a banner in front of McGinley's pub directly across from the Dena'ina Center sported the AFN logo and the slogan "A Jack in the hand is worth two in the Bush". The message and the use of the AFN logo caused uproar among delegates. While the AFN convention discussed again how to get a handle on social ills and drug and alcohol addictions in rural communities, the banner left a bitter taste, especially because Mayor Dan Sullivan is a co-founder of McGinley's pub and bar. The banner was taken down after reporters drew attention to the matter.

After Mayor Sullivan exited the stage, Governor Sean Parnell addressed the crowd and held a speech fraught with allegoric metaphors. He summoned the vision of steep mountains, cliffs and eagles riding the ridge winds as a metaphor for Alaskans to rise as one to combat domestic violence, to be uplifted by others successes and to choose respect. Governor Parnell spoke about having worked in the past year on tribal court agreements; on fighting the federal government about the road to King Cove; on challenging the status quo in education by introducing new programs on vocational and digital learning and to funding renewable energy projects that replaced 13 million gallons of diesel fuel use across Alaska. The Governor then announced Gloria O'Neill as the recipient of the Shirley Demientieff Award. O'Neill is president of Cook Inlet Tribal Council. The Shirley Demientieff Award is given by the governor to recognize advocacy on behalf of Alaska Native women and

Native Language bill signing

Away from the main meeting room, on the second floor of the Dena'ina Center, Governor Parnell invited people to attend the signing ceremony of House Bill 216, legislation designating 20 Native languages as official languages in the State of Alaska. The bill signing was deemed historic and was an emotional moment for the elders present. The oldest Native speaker present was Selina Everson of Juneau. Everson addressed the crowd in Haida and thanked the Governor, the bill sponsors and all involved for making the new law possible. She related a story of an elder she knew who would cry like a baby when reminded of the fact that there was a time in Alaskan history when Native languages were not allowed to be spoken. Bernadette 'Yaayuk" Alvanna-Stimpfle stood beside the podium as Gov. Parnell's pen touched the paper. She spoke in Înupiaq, saying that English speakers are now even with Inupiaq speak-

Representative Jonathan Kreiss-Tomkins, D-Sitka sponsored the bill. He stated he had been inspired to do so while having coffee with Lance Twitchell, an assistant professor of Alaska Native languages in Juneau, during which they spoke about the fate of Native languages. Twitchell later addressed the crowd and said that language carries a culture's

After the bill signing, a speaker from each of the 20 now official Alaskan languages spoke a few words to commemorate the bill. Most were elders still fluent in their language, but young girl from Cordova spoke Eyak, a language nearly extinct. The 20 Native languages include Inupiaq, Siberian Yupik, Central Alaskan Yup'ik, Alutiiq, Unangax, Dena'ina, Deg Xinag, Holikachuk, Koyukon, Upper Kuskokwim, Gwich'in, Tanana, Upper Tanana, Tanacross, Hän, Ahtna, Eyak, Tlingit, Haida and Tsimshian.

Tears of joy and painful memories were flowing; people applauded and soaked up the historic moment. Twitchell cited a Canadian study, which found that if 50 percent of a community speaks their Native language, the suicide rate dropped to zero percent.

Healing from social ills

Bluntly speaking out against alcohol, drugs and the unspeakable pain of suicide, the Tanana 4-H club and their organizer Cynthia Erickson were invited to take center stage again this year. During last year's convention in Fairbanks, the Tanana girls shared horrendous stories of family dysfunction due to alcohol and drugs, and of the holes left in their community and families due to suicide. This year, their message was to challenge each and every delegate in the room to do something about it. "I challenge you to stand up and protect the ones you love," said one of the girls. Gladys Erhart spoke about finding something positive in life and the necessity to help others. "I help with our sled dogs, I want to be the kind of person to help others, that others look up to. Try to do something positive. I race dogs, that's what I do," she said. "I challenge you to be positive and remain or become alcohol and drug free."

Megan Erhart remembered the shots that rang through Tanana the night that two Alaska State Troopers were shot. She asked for adults to protect their children. "I challenge you to remember that the children are watching. They become you!"

Standing behind the girls was a row of Alaska State Troopers, including Nome post trooper Aileen Witrowsky. The 4-H club then held up signs asking the crowd to vote No on Ballot Measure 2, which seeks to legalize the recreational use of marijuana in Alaska.

Adding to the pain

Suicide was also at the center of remarks made by U.S. Congressman Don Young. Just a few days earlier, while speaking to a Wasilla High School assembly trying to come to grips with the suicide of one of their student friends that week, Young said suicide showed a lack of support from friends and family. Young spent most of his allotted time apologizing for the remarks that were perceived as insensitive and hurtful. Young said he has a private side to him that people rarely see. He then spoke about the suicide of a family member. "It is very personal to me. It may have caused me to mangle some of my statements and comments that caused this uproar," he said. "But I will tell you, I have asked myself many times, did I do enough? Did I take the nephew away from an abusive father? Did I love him enough? Did I do enough? Apparently, I did not. I made up my mind that I was trying to prevent the future of suicides from occurring." In further apology for his Wasilla statements, Young said, "Because of my comments, I am profoundly and genuinely sorry for the pain it has caused the Alaskan people. I am genuinely sorry for the pain I have caused the individual, as I have experienced it, and hope that you won't have to experience that."

Young then pointed to federal legislation to tackle suicide and mental health issues. "I cosponsored and voted to fund the Mental Health First Aid act, which was enacted into law," he said. "It gives $10 million in grants to state and local entities to train teachers, schools, police officers, and others how to identify the warning signs of someone suffering from a variety of mental illnesses such as depression or substance abuse or contemplating suicide."

Kevnote

The first day was marked with presentations addressing social ills. Keynote speakers Mao Tosi and Miriam Aarons spoke about the crime that had brought them together. Last year, a man was released from jail, broke into a home where grandparents were watching their two-year old granddaughter. The man killed the grandparents and sexually assaulted the two-year old girl. Learning about the crime Tosi, a father himself, and Aarons, expecting twin boys, decided to do something to help that family in need. "As a mother I felt angry at the injustice," said Aarons. "I hoped that somebody would help them. Then I said, Why APOLOGETIC— Congressman Don Young used his time addressing the AFN convention to apologize for insensitive remarks made at a Wasilla High School assembly.

Tosi and Aarons began organizing car washes and a concert to raise $30,000 for the family. Tosi and Aarons then spoke about their diverse background. Tosi, a college basketball star, was born in American Samoa and came to Alaska with his parents at age 12. He spoke about the turmoil of protecting family members from his alcoholic father. He spoke about his peers selling drugs and having money whereas he went hungry but refused to get into the drug trade. "Instead I went every day to my coach's office and just sat there." Eventually, the coach would give him $20 and say, "Go get me a burrito and get something to eat for yourself." He attributed his success in life to the generosity shown to him when he was in his formative years.

Miriam Aarons, originally from Unalakleet, works for the Bering Straits Native Corporation as the corporate communications director. She was a victim of a violent crime when studying in New York City. She said violent experiences are shared by many, including domestic violence or sexual assault. "It is our time to seize the power to heal," she said. "Alaska has the highest rates in the world on domestic violence, sexual assault and suicide. We have the power to change that."

Youth programs. Believing that learning comes when kids can relate to and like what they do, Tosi presented a group during the Quyana performances. They performed not only traditional Polynesian Haka dances but also showed off their aptitude in modern break and hiphop dancing.

Gerard Godfrey, Chair of the Violent Crimes Compensation Board, offered a different perspective on crimes and rural Alaska. Godfrey said he grew up as a son of an Alaska State Trooper. It was normal for his dad to be called out in the middle of the night to respond to a domestic violence situation. Godfrey spoke about the system that enables repeat offenders. While reviewing victim cases, he often finds incidents in which a minor has told someone of the assault, or that a mom or aunty walked in and saw it happening, yet the assault was never reported to authorities. "The message to that child is, it's better to get beat up once a month than not to get salmon or meat next summer. It's not worth to call the cops for," Godfrey said. "That's enabling."

Godfrey stated that the cure is not to outsource the problem solving to the state. "We need to change the pattern of enabling and that is what those Tanana 4 H girls do. They want to end the cycle and the cycle starts with all of us. When we diminish what somebody is doing to children or women, when we diminish what we do to ourselves, this will go on perpetually," Godfrey said.

Other presentations included updates by U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack, Dept. of Interior Deputy Secretary Mike Connor, US Fish and Wildlife Service director Daniel Ashe and National Congress of American Indians President Brian Cladoosby.

In concurrent work sessions, delegates broke out to discuss subsistence, climate change, public safety and education.

On the last day of the gathering, the delegates elected a new co-chair. Serving with Bethel's Ana Hoffman, who was elected last year for a two-year term, will be former Tanana Chiefs Conference President Jerry Leace Delegates of AFN also passed about 50 resolutions on Saturday morning, including a resolution opposing Ballot measure 2 to legalize marijuana.

After most resolutions had passed, the committee asked for an executive session to discuss whether or not the body will endorse Senator Mark Begich in his bid for reelection. During those one and a half hours of executive session discussion, AFN delegates also discussed endorsing the gubernatorial candidate pair of Independent Bill Walker and Democrat Byron Mallot.

In the end, AFN endorsed Begich and endorsed what has become known as the Unity Ticket Walker/Mallot.

Native family in Rampart. Sullivan is married to Julie Fate, the daughter of Mary Jane and Hugh Fate.

Mark Begich received a warm round of applause and spoke about the importance of this year's senatorial race. "It will decide the future of Alaska for many generations to come," he said. Begich then talked about his family and his late father Nick Begich, who was a prominent politician prior to his death in an airplane crash. Begich spoke about his commitment to Native people and subsistence rights.

The format of the debate consisted of a first round of questions that required only "yes" or "no." Clickers were distributed among the audience to the poll audience's responses to the question. Gerard Godfrey and AFN co-chair Ana Hoffman asked the questions. First Alaskan Institute President and CEO Liz Medicine Crow was the timekeeper and beat a skin drum when the allotted time had passed.

CHALLENGER— Former DNR commissioner and former Attorney General Dan Sullivan is vying for the U.S. Senator's seat.

Taking their seats on high bar stools at opposite corners of the stage, the candidates faced a full room of AFN delegates, eager to hear the debate.

The crowd was fair, but more partial toward Mark Begich, waving signs more sympathetic to him than Dan Sullivan. During the first round, Sullivan could not answer a single question with a simple yes or no, as required. "Do you support the Pebble Mine project?" Begich answered a clear 'no,' Sullivan deviating from the format began, "I support the process..." drawing boos from the audience and a reprimand from Godfrey to stick to yes or no answers.

"Do you support co-management of federal agencies, state and tribes on ANCSA lands?"

Sullivan couldn't answer and Begich said "yes."

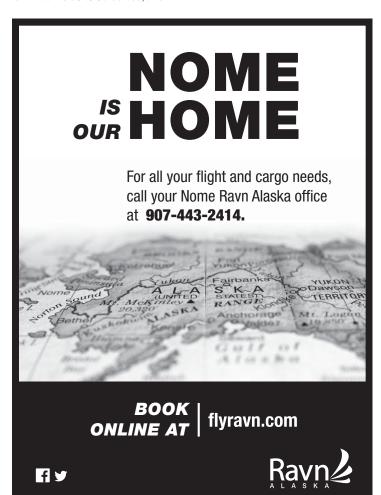

As former state Attorney General who has played a part in challenging the Katie John case, Sullivan had a tough audience to convince that he's the best choice. Asked, "Do you support the Supreme Court's decision to reject the state's appeal of the Katie John case?" Begich said "yes" and

Sullivan began to explain, "I respect the Supreme Court's decision."

The next round allowed each candidate two minutes to answer the question with no direct engagement with the opponent. Again, Sullivan had to be reprimanded when a heated back-and-forth erupted answering a question about voting rights. Sullivan said he'd like to see more actions than talk and stated that Begich was on the opposite site when it came to a voting rights lawsuit.

"The Violence Against Women's Act contained a provision that excluded Alaska Native tribes from tribal jurisdictions, how will you repeal that section?"

Begich acknowledged the importance of the issue and said he will work to fix that component of the law in order to set up tribal courts that can deal with domestic violence and child protection.

Begich said, after the elections, there is a piece of legislation ready to move out of committee and onto the Senate floor.

Sullivan responded by attacking Begich's track record. He said Begich has put well over 240 bills forward, but has not much to show for their advancement. "It's one thing to put out a bill, it's another to put forward an action," Sullivan said. He pointed to the State's and his efforts with the Governor's "Choose Respect" campaign. When his time was up and the drum sounded, he kept on talking, drawing another reprimand by Godfrey to respect the time limit.

The next question addressed the protection of Native hunting and fishing rights. "Do you believe the dual federal and state management is working?"

Sullivan conceded that subsistence is "incredibly important" to him, to his teenage daughters and his family in Rampart. However, the State of Alaska, through him as AG, fought Katie John for her right to subsistence fish at a traditional fish camp in the Wrangell St. Elias Mountains. In order to distance himself from this unpopular act in front of the AFN crowd, Sullivan said, "When I was attorney general, I participated in a small section of the Katie John case. I advocated for state control over federal control of our rivers." He asserted that it was not personally against Katie John, and that he respects the late elder as he respects his mother in law.

While agreeing with Begich that the dual management system is broken, Begich gave a different solution. "I get requests for more federal control because people think the state is not managing the resources well."

Regarding economic development and energy costs, both agreed that more must be done to enhance opportunity and to cut energy costs.

Begich stressed the need for infrastructure development, to bring high-speed internet and broadband to all communities and he pointed to his support of the stimulus bill, which he said helped built the Nome hospital.

Sullivan countered saying that as DNR commissioner, he pushed for exploration of Alaska's "incredible" resources. "We need to look at and create incentives to bring the private sector into Alaska," Sullivan said. "We need those public private partnerships and cut the red tape."

The hour-long debate finished up with the question: Say something that qualifies your opponent for the job.

Both candidates had to think a second. Sullivan said of Begich: "He has a lot of respect for Native people....and so do I." He drew enthusiastic applause for that.

Begich lauded Sullivan's military service. "I think Dan's service to this country is to be respected and honored. I also think he has a great family."

AFN on Saturday went into executive session to discuss an endorsement resolution. After one and a half hours the AFN announced the endorsement of Senator Mark Begich.

ASKING TOUGH QUESTIONS— Time keeper Liz Medicine Crow, Gerard Godfrey and Ana Hoffman posed questions to candidates in the senatorial and gubernatorial debate during last week's AFN Convention in Anchorage.

AFN: Gubernatorial debate

By Diana Haecker

During the AFN debate forum, incumbent Republican Governor Sean Parnell faced independent challenger Bill Walker.

The format was set up like the senatorial debate, starting with a one-minute introduction, several questions to be answered only with 'yes' or 'no' and issues questions to be answered within two minutes.

The barrage of questions began with Education and the statement that the current state educational system is failing Native children. Parnell said he took steps to make the rural education system fair and equitable. He promised to blow open doors of opportunity through additional vocational opportunities and enhanced digital teaching.

Walker said in his campaign travels he learned that schools across the state need to "broaden their menu." As an example he gave Nome's NACTEC program and the vocational opportunities it creates for young students.

Regarding public safety, Walker said he was a big proponent of the tribal justice system, but acknowledged that there is no silver bullet that fixes everything wrong with public safety in Alaska.

Gov. Parnell said key is to quit cutting funds for law enforcement and to work collaboratively with the tribes. He said he made a commitment five years ago to beef up the trooper force and VPSO force in the villages. "There is a need for cultural relevant remedies for alcohol and drug abuse," he said, before calling on the federal government to step up funding to address those problems.

The question if the candidates supported the Pebble mine drew a mixed response. "Based on what I know, I do not support the Pebble mine," said Walker. Walker said he aggressively is for developing Alaska's resources. "We are an owner state, we need to act like that." He added that he would propose to incentivize local hire and to create jobs for Alaskans that cause Alaskan kids to stay here and work at home.

Gov. Parnell answered that Walker has the luxury of passing judgment on Pebble, whereas he has not. "I can say that I cannot take a position on Pebble. If the governor can take a position, it would breed corruption," he said. As permit applications are submitted, science comes in and the DNR commissioner will make a final determination.

Asked about the opening of the Arctic and its ramifications for Alaska, Parnell said that it is mandatory that Alaska has the infrastructure in place to be able to benefit from the Arctic boom. He said there needs to be port in Western Alaska, and that his office together with DNR, the Bering Straits Native Corporation and the federal government are working on a land transfer at Port Clarence's Point Spencer. Parnell added that it is not just the environment and economy that need consideration but also the people who live in the Arctic.

Walker voiced his concern about ship transits and oil and gas exploration on the Russian side of the Bering Strait. He called on the federal government to find an equitable way for Alaskans to have a share of the benefits. "We get the risks, we need to also benefit from it," he said.

Asked about the Affordable Care Act and how the candidates would assure fair health coverage, Walker said it's the law of the land now and, as such, he would take advantage of expanding Medicaid, something the Parnell administration has refused to do. "It's not a money issue, it's a human decency issue," Walker said.

Parnell shot back saying that it's a misconception that the federal government has paid for the expansion of Medicaid, because the federal government keeps borrowing money from China to pay for the expansion.

main? Walker, an attorney, responded that he would quit litigating and start talking. "I'd bring out a cup of coffee instead of drafting paper, he said. Parnell also thought the system needed some change, but not on the state's side. "The federal side of the equation is not working well, the state side is not working perfectly either," he said. Parnell then turned emotional and said he had demonstrated with the AFN board that he is able to sit down over a cup of coffee and discuss sensitive issues. "You have seen my love for you," Parnell said. "Yes, we had our disagreements, but I respect you, I love you and I continue to do so.'

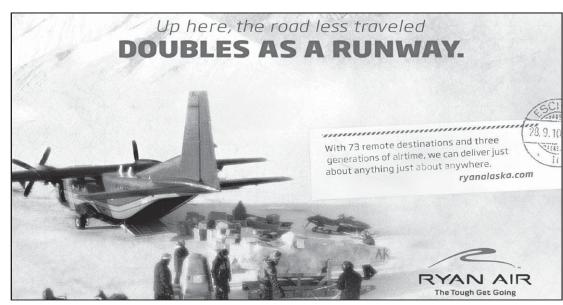

This affirmation did not convince AFN. After a lengthy executive session on Saturday, the delegates decided to endorse the Walker/Byron Mallott ticket for governor. In a statement delivered after the AFN convention closed, Bering Straits Native Corporation announced its endorsement of Walker/Mallott.

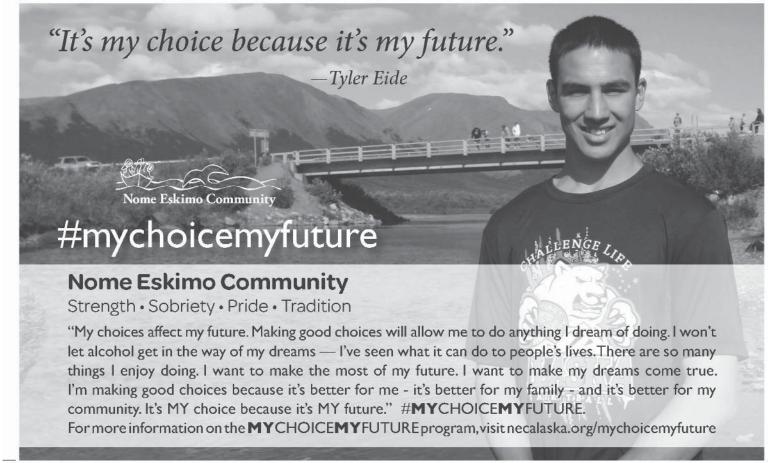

"The stakes in these elections are far too great for BSNC not to publicly endorse candidates, particularly in the gubernatorial race," BSNC Chairman Henry Ivanoff said. "At the State level, Alaska needs an administration that responds to rural and urban issues and one that places a priority on the health and wellbeing of its citizens. Our endorsement represents the position of BSNC's Board of Directors. BSNC

NSHC Health Fair reels in visitors

By Sarah Miller

This year's health fair continued its tradition of bringing together various community organizations in Nome under a creative theme to provide health and safety education to Nome residents. NSHC staff coordinated the theme of "Reelin' in Wellness," which lent itself to fun booth decorations, games, and prizes for visitors, while increasing public awareness of preventable health conditions and potential dangers. Children were able to fish for prizes at the NSHC Human Resources booth, and enjoyed the always popular bounce house sponsored by Behavioral Health Services, a dunk tank, and a walk through "Nolan the Colon" (the inflatable model of the human colon which provides a vivid depiction of the importance of colon cancer screenings).

Participating organizations provided education on all aspects of health, from physical and mental health, from physical and mental health, to spiritual health, literacy, and cultural connections. In addition to service organizations that are connected to the hospital, such as the Infant Learning Program, WIC (Women Infants & Children), and Healthy Start, physical health education was also offered by community organizations including Arctic Chiropractic and Nome Community Center's Obesity and Tobacco Prevention Programs.

At UAF's Cooperative Extension booth, visitors learned about the antioxidant benefits of various types of berries, with the tundra blueberry exceeding the grocery store blueberry's antioxidant levels by a surprisingly large amount. Even higher than all of the listed berries was the species of cranberry found on the tundra. At the NSHC Dental booth, visitors learned about the number one cause of tooth decay (poor dental hygiene).

The Healthy Start booth focused on educating parents and caregivers about safe sleep practices for infants. The "ABC's of Safe Sleep" stand for "alone, back and crib". "We are focusing on risk reduction," explained Carol Hobbs, "We're encouraging families not to sleep with their infants, to let them sleep alone, laid on their backs, and in a crib. But we know that many households have limited space. So helping people find options for babies to sleep safely, without blankets or soft bedding or stuffed animals that pose a suffocation risk. Even a simple cardboard box will work, and if it's in your room, then the baby is still sleeping alone with the parents nearby.

Healthy Start's other booth display provided information about the importance of breastfeeding infants for optimal health. The display featured a photo of a Native Alaskan woman breastfeeding an infant, encouraging Native communities to accept the practice for not only its health benefits, but for its traditional place in Native cultures. "Breast milk has over three hundred ingredients not found in formula. It's the first Native food a baby should have," explained Hobbs. The display board also included statistics about the cost of breastfeeding versus formula feeding, which can cost a family between $500 and $3000 annually.

Visitors to the health fair also learned about the various community service and advocacy groups that exist in Nome to serve needs of all kinds. Kawerak's Child Advocacy booth, hosted by Colleen Deighton, offered an activity for children to trace their hands, and then to write on each finger the name of a trusted adult whom they can count on to help keep them safe. The Child Advocacy program provides a process for investigations, exams, and interviews to happen in a safe, non-threatening environment to reduce trauma to children who have been abused or hurt. The program was launched in 2002, explained Deighton. "That year, we handled 16 cases of abuse. In 2011 and in 2012, we saw 35 cases each year. In 2013, we had 50 cases, and this year, we are already at 49 cases. I don't believe there are more incidents happening, but I think we've been able to offer better education and referrals, and children are getting more comfortable with reporting incidents."

The Nome Ministerial Association booth, hosted by pastors and ministers of various denominations, discussed the relevance of spirituality in a holistic view of health. "No matter how good a person is at physical health, we lose the battle," commented Harvey Fiskeaux, Pastor of the Nome Covenant Church, in a conversation with Don Ward of the Nazarene Church. "We need to also be concerned about the quality of our eternal life, and that's not found in pills or exercise or in any earthly effort. A relationship with Christ is a spiritual health necessity."

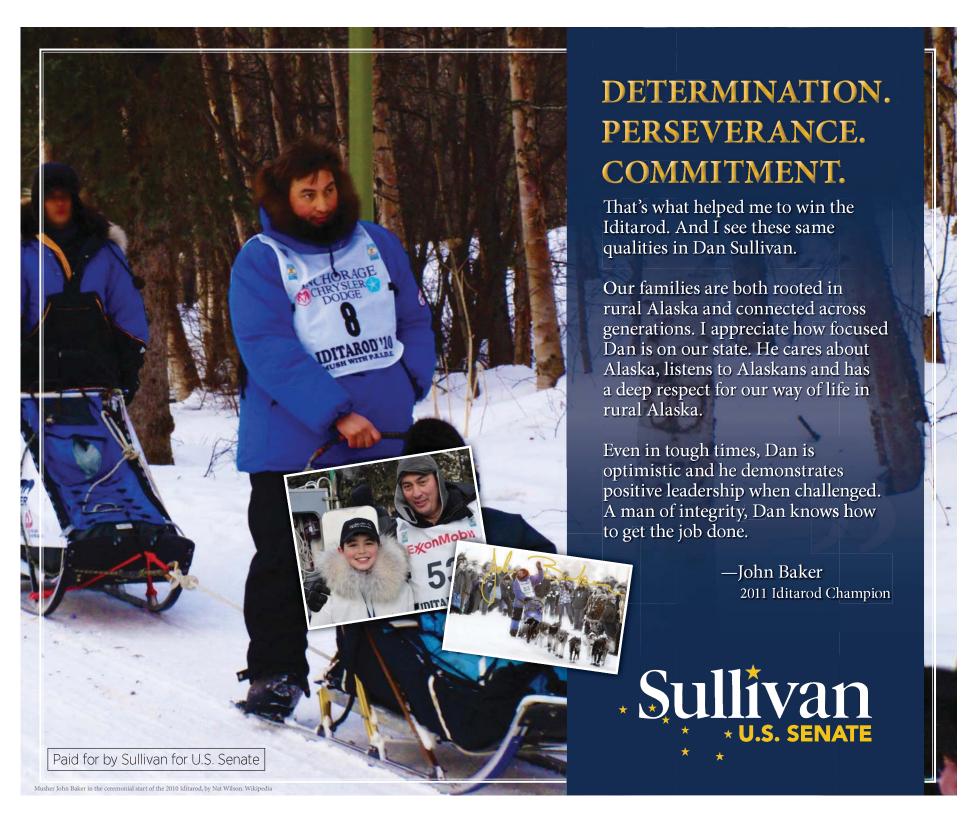

Other booth vendors shared information on health and safety through connectedness to the land, at the National Park Services booth, as well as the importance of cognitive and developmental health, with booths sponsored by the Literacy Council and Nome Educational Association. The health benefits of remaining connected to cultural practices were also showcased at the fair, with booths sponsored by the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium, Nome Eskimo Community and distribution of materials such as a cookbook for native foods? Other social services available in Nome were showcased at booths to address needs such as addiction prevention and rehabilita-

Nome residents were offered other convenient and low-cost preventive screening procedures including blood tests for thyroid, cholesterol, and blood typing. Many took advantage of these screenings to avoid the cost of a clinic visit. Last year's health fair statistics showed 160 flu shots and 80 blood draws performed for the nearly 700 visitors. The Public Health Nursing Services booth provided free flu mist and shot vaccines to adults and children at the fair.

Nome-Beltz girls volleyball team beats Bethel; tripped up by Juneau-Douglas

By Keith Conger

After a slow start to the season, the Nome-Beltz Nanooks varsity volleyball team was looking forward to turning a red-hot middle of the season into a number one seed for the Western Conference Regional tournament in early November. A win against Kotzebue this past weekend would have greatly helped that cause. The problem was, due to flight delays, the second place Nanooks arrived in Bethel three hours late, thus missing their muchanticipated showdown with the first place Huskies.

Consequently, the varsity's first match of the weekend was a contest against the 4A Juneau-Douglas Bears, perennial state tournament qualifiers. Coach Lucas Frost said in a phone interview that his team played at the highest level he had seen all year.

In the first set of the match, an incredible 70% of Nanook passes make it to the setter, allowing the team to get their offense in place to attack the ball. Frost said seniors Jane Tidwell and Alyssa Bushey led the way for the team. Bushey's stuff block for a point off a 6-foot tall Juneau player highlighted a 25-20 first set victory. Nome's hot passing slowed down in the second set, resulting in a 25-15 loss, but it picked up in the third and fourth sets. The Nanooks made it close before losing each set 25-23.

With scores of 25 – 17, 25 – 23, and 25 – 19, the Nanooks were able to best the Bethel Warriors in their second match. Rene Merchant's amazing streak of five straight weekend play without missing a serve came to an end in the match against the Warriors. Allaryce Agloinga replaced an injured Kalani Suemai and had a solid weekend attacking the ball.

The Nome-Beltz junior varsity volleyball girls won their three-set matches against the Kotzebue JV and Bethel JV squads. The Nanooks' scores against the Huskies were 20 – 25, 25 – 19, 15 – 10. They beat Bethel with scores of 17 – 25, 25 – 23, 15 – 6.

Because the Nome varsity girls were not able to play their Kotzebue counterparts, the regional seeding remains unsettled. Coach Frost stated that, if only five-set matches were counted, Kotzebue would currently have a 5-2 head-to-head conference record; the Nanooks would have a 4-3 record Rounding out the unofficial standings are. Barrow at 1-3 and Bethel at 0-4. Even if the Nanook varsity team beat both Barrow and Bethel in Barrow next weekend, their 6 -3 conference record, with all three losses to the Huskies, might not be enough to gain the top seed in the Western Conference Regional Tournament.

Booshu leads Nanooks at Nome Invitational Wrestling Tournament

By Keith Conger

In front of a packed house on Senior Night at the Nome Invitational Wrestling Tournament, Nanooks wrestler Emery Booshu made sure his final appearance before a Nome home crowd was a memorable one.

Booshu, the three-time defending state champion, was given quite a challenge in the 152/160 pound weight class by Kotzebue's Gus Nelson, who had obviously listened well to the scouting report given to him by Huskies' coach Mark Lane. Booshu held a 2 - 1 advantage after the first period of the match by scoring 2 points on a takedown; Nelson scored one point with an escape. The second period began with Nelson in the down position. Booshu, from the up position, worked to gain control. Midway through the period, the referee made a controversial stalling call on the Nome wrestler and awarded a match-tying second point to Nelson. The period ended with the wrestlers tied at two.

This loss of point may have been the motivation Booshu needed to close the match. He came out after the break with renewed determination. Booshu capitalized on a flash opportunity early on, ending the match with a pin 20 seconds into the period.

Booshu and four other Nome wrestlers competed in the high school championship finals. They were joined at the tournament by over 100 junior high and high school wrestlers from eight locations across the state.

Junior Leif Erikson, the Nanooks' other defending state champion, wrestled Harry Baldwin of Kotzebue in the championship match of the 138 pound class. Erikson made quick work of his opponent, registering a pin in only 39 seconds.

While there are few guarantees in sports, a Nanook winning the championship in the 145 pound weight class was a foregone conclusion.

Gabe Smith and Jason Gilder, a pair of Nome-Beltz seniors, competed against one another in their last home match. That match delivered one of the most exciting contests of the championship round. The teammates had competed in a previous match during the tournament ending with Gilder besting Smith 9 – 7 to gain the top seed. Smith opened the first period of their championship match with a takedown. Gilder escaped Smith's grasp for a point. The first period ended with a 2-1 score.

Gilder opened the second period with a takedown, but Smith pulled an escape of his own and added a reversal establishing a 5 – 3 margin at the end the period. With a 7 – 4 lead in period three and only 30 seconds remaining in the match, Smith was able to control Gilder for a pin and won the championship in the 145 pound weight class.

Oliver Hoogendorn made sure that Nome-Beltz seniors went 4 for 4 in championship match appearances. Hoogendorn took 2nd place in the 170/182 pound weight class, losing to Zach Haviland of Kotzebue Huskies squad. Hoogendorn kept the match close at 2 – 1 after the first period but eventually lost by a score of 11 – 3.

Nanook junior Nolan Horner secured a spot in the championship match of the 195/220 pound combined weight class. His opponent was defending state champ Josh Roetman of Kotzebue. In December of 2013, Roetman placed 5th in his weight class at the Reno Tournament of Champions, dubbed by organizers as "the Toughest Tournament in the USA." Roetman was able to pin Horner in 52 seconds. Two Nanook wrestlers placed third in the championship rounds. Junior James Horner and sophomore Timothy James took the bronze medals in the 145 pound and 152/160 pound weight classes respectively.

Because team scores were not kept at the tournament, it was difficult to compare the talented squads. That was fine with Nanooks coach Dudley Homelvig who said, "we are still working on individual improvement. If each wrestler takes care of what they need to do, the team score takes care of itself."

Tournament organizers achieved their goal of increasing regional participation. By flip-flopping weekends with Bethel on the traditional wrestling schedule, Nome-Beltz was able to attract teams from the Bering Straits School District including Unalakleet, Gambell, Saint Michaels, and Brevig Mission. A team of wrestlers from Galena represented the interior. It is exciting to note that at least one wrestler from each participating school placed in the top three of a particular weight class.

John Rochon of Unalakleet, the lone BSSD high school wrestler, took third in the 89/106 pound weight class. Ten BSSD junior high wrestlers achieved the podium. They were led by gold medal winners Alvin Washington of Saint Michaels (105 pound weight class), Ashton Aningayou of Gambell (125 pound class), and Jon Avalnun of Gambell (145 pound class).

The Nome Invitational provided a great opportunity for the Nanook junior high wrestlers to showcase their talents. One of the highlights of the junior high competition was a top place finish by Nome's Marilena Koozata, who took the gold medal in the 100 pound weight class. Other top Nanook finishers were Kenneth Haffner (85 pound weight class), Dawson Evans (95 pound weight class) and Ben Cross (120 pound weight class).

The Nome Junior High wrestlers were guided by assistant coach Lonnie Booshu, and volunteer assistant coaches Duke McGuffy and Charlie Cross

"Next weekend we will know where all the big dogs are," said Homelvig after the tournament. He was making reference to his team's upcoming attendance at the all-important ACS Tournament next weekend. Homelvig explained that this is the point in the season where wrestlers begin competing at the weight they will most likely be during the state tournament.

As part of Senior Night, the Nanooks honored team manager Josh Gologergen, who had been forced to the sideline after suffering a broken leg last year. Coach Homelvig was honored by the wrestling parents after the awards ceremony. The long-time Nanooks coach received a standing ovation from the crowd after which he posed for pictures with all the wrestlers in the audience he had coached over the years.

MATCH OF THE NIGHT – Teammates Gabe Smith and Jason Gilder met up in the 145 pound weight class championship match at the Nome Invitational Wrestling Tournament on Saturday night. Smith went on to win the match.

My administration has increased rural law enforcement to keep our villages safe; expanded support for renewable energy projects and weatherization programs, and fully funded PCE to lower energy costs; championed funds for elder care facilities in rural communities; and worked to manage fish and game for abundance to increase harvest of subsistence resources. Let's keep working together to strengthen our rural communities. I respectfully ask for your vote on November 4.

Math and Science — Not just for rocket scientists

By Dick Resch Looking to get rich? Try welding.

For the third consecutive year, positions in the skilled trades are the hardest to fill, according to a Manpower Group survey of American employers. This shortage is why a master welder can earn a sixfigure salary — without a college degree.

There aren't enough skilled tradesmen because our nation's schools aren't producing graduates with the math and science knowledge needed to fill these skilled

That has to change. Educators must rethink the way they teach math and science — especially to students who may not go to college. The best way to reach these kids is to scrap the age-old lecture and empower them to learn by doing.

International rankings reveal the depths of America's underachievement. Among 34 developed nations, the United States ranks 27th in math and 20th in science. More than one-quarter of U.S. students lack even basic proficiency in math. That's 13 percent higher than the global average.

This poor performance is concerning, as these students risk economic marginalization.

A million people drop out of high school each year. Most don't participate in the labor force. Those that do face an unemployment rate 50 percent higher than their graduating peers.

That low-performing quarter of students also includes many who complete high school yet still lack the math skills needed for most entry-level manufacturing jobs let alone the skilled-trade positions that could vault them into the middle class.

Philadelphia Federal Reserve President Charles Plosser said earlier this year, "We are seeing a mismatch of skills in the workforce and the jobs that are being created."

To fill these jobs — and provide livelihoods for millions — we must keep students who struggle with math in school and find ways to boost their achievement.

According to the National Training Laboratories, the traditional lecture format yields only a 5 percent learning retention rate. Allowing students to practice by doing, in contrast, results in a whopping 75 percent retention rate.

The way forward is clear: Embrace technology, collaboration, and hands-on learning.

Already, colleges are adopting this approach. The University of Pennsylvania has built a new classroom with customized, powered round tables so students can collaborate using all manner of technology. It plans to add three to four more such classrooms over the next MIT's Technology-Enabled Active Learning (TEAL) Project merges lecture, simulation, collaborative learning, and hands-on experiments in one classroom. Failure rates for freshmen in a TEAL physics course were one-third those in the traditional setting. Average gains in understanding were more than double. Gains were highest among students at the bottom of the achievement ladder.

Engaged learning models are trickling schools, too. In Philadelphia, several schools are using the Full Option Science System, a hands-on, activity-based approach that empowers students to investigate, experiment, and collaborate to discover the material in each lesson.

Students at FOSS schools have scored higher on standardized tests. The longer

Dear Editor,

I'm a Democrat. I voted for President Obama twice and I'm proud of those votes. I'm a Democrat because Democrats protect and provide for the rights of The People, you know, us, the Real People, not the "people" as defined by the Supreme Court: multi-national corporations.

I'm a Democrat because I'm a woman. Democrats believe that women are equal to men, have equal rights as workers, have equal rights to health care. Democrats believe being pregnant is not a disability, that being a mother is an asset to an employer, that a position's wage is the wage to be paid regardless if filled by a man or a woman, that affordable child care is a benefit to business and should be available to both male and female employees.

Democrats know that the minimum wage should be raised in order for individuals on their own or for families to just survive without having to ask for public assistance. Democrats recognize and are grateful for the medical burdens lifted off us by the enactment of the Affordable Health Care Act (Obama Care). I know what it has meant to members of my family and I am grateful.

I'm a Democrat because I believe in equal rights under the law – rights which include the ability to Vote without restriction, the right to be a union member, the right to write and speak my opinion in public without retribution, the right be a member of a jury and to be judged by a jury of my peers. Democrats fight to fund Legal Services and the Public Defenders Office, on which so many of us depend to represent us in the courts. Democrats, and you may not know this, are responsible for enacting the Alaska Victims' Rights Act into law. Democrats also ensured in law, regulation, policy and procedure rights of inmates in our prison system. I'm grateful for both.

I'm a Democrat because I want to drink clean water and breathe clean air. Democrats support the EPA and the benefits it brings us. Democrats support responsible access to and mining of our natural resources and that the people affected by those activities have first hand knowledge and input into decisions made about uses of their land. Alaska Housing Finance Corporation (AHFC) is pleased to announce the SFY 2015 Notice of Funding Availability (NOFA) for the Operating Expense Assistance (OEA). This program is for organizations who meet the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), HOME Investment Partnerships Program criteria as Community Housing Development Organizations (CHDOs) or who are interested in becoming CHDOs as defined by HUD 24 CFR Part 92.

Application for OEA funding is a two (2) step process. Applicants must (1) register for the online application system by submitting a Notice of Intent to Apply form, and (2) submit an Application using the online application system. Applicants will NOT be eligible to apply for OEA funding unless they have submitted a Notice of Intent to Apply form by the 4:30 p.m. (Anchorage time) on November 10, 2014.

Step (1): To submit Applications through the online system, AHFC must first receive a Notice of Intent to Apply Form for the online system by 4:30 p.m. (Anchorage time) on November 10, 2014. Electronic Notice of Intent to Apply forms should be emailed to Aaron Schilling, OEA Program Manager at aschilling@ahfc.us. chilling@ahfc.us.

Step (2): Completed Applications must be submitted through the online application system by December 8, 2014 at 4:30 p.m. Anchorage time.

The OEA program provides operating cost funding to CHDOs certified by AHFC. To receive OEA funds, a CHDO must demonstrate that it has or intends to develop, sponsor, or own HOME Investment Partnerships Program assisted housing outside of the Municipality of Anchorage Telefax or hard copy forms will not be accepted. Forms delivered to an incorrect AHFC address or received after the deadline will not be eligible to apply and will not be considered for funding.

The REGULATORY COMMISSION OF ALASKA (Commission) gives notice that Alaska Pacific Environmental Services Nome, LLC d/b/a Pacific Waste (APES-Nome) filed tariff revision TA19-655, seeking a permanent rate increase of 22.46 percent, applied to all tariff rates, based on a revenue requirement cost of service and rate design study with a 2013 test year. In addition, APES-Nome proposes to eliminate Roll On/Roll Off Service and replace it with High Volume Service. A sample of the current and proposed rates are as follows:

Notice of Utility Tariff Filing

Service	Current	Proposed
Residential Can (1 pick-up/wk)	$27.87	$29.37
Light Commercial Can (1 pick-up/wk)	$52.23	$78.32
Heavy Commercial Can (1 pick-up/wk)	$87.06	$90.37
Roll-On/Roll-Off to High Volume	$1,170.77	$1,857.28*
Additional Pickup Service (per hour)	$167.14	$196.93
Drive In/Pack Out (per container)	$5.58	$6.57

*Current Roll On/Roll Off Service, proposed High Volume Service

In conjunction with TA19-655, APES-Nome filed a request for waiver of the requirements of 3 AAC 48.275(a)(8), 3 AAC 48.275(a)(11), and 3 AAC 48.275(a)(12), requiring pro forma schedules of provision for income taxes, cash working capital, and cost of capital.

This notice may not contain all requested revisions and the Commission may approve a rate or classification which varies from that proposed. WALK FOR THE CURE LEADERS — The Nome-Beltz Girls Volleyball team led a group of approximately 100 people on the 8th Annual Walk for the Cure. The event, sponsored by the Arctic Pinkies, is aimed at raising cancer awareness.

The Arctic Pinkies lead 8th annual Walk for the Cure

By Keith Conger

Approximately 100 people gathered Tuesday evening to join the Arctic Pinkies for the 8th Annual Walk for The Cure. The Arctic Pinkies was started in 2008 by Nome community member Christine Ann Carpenter Perkins who rallied her friends and family together when she was diagnosed with cancer.

Before the Walk began, John

Handeland presented a brief introduction to the Arctic Pinkies. He praised the Pinkies for raising more than $100,000 over the past seven years. Their goal this year is to raise at least $10,000. The funds are used for many purposes including promoting cancer awareness, furthering cancer research, and continuing assistance for local regional patients.

Attendees of the 2014 Walk for the Cure met at Old Saint Joe's church where they found papers printed with "Here in Memory of." They were encouraged to write down the names of people who had either passed away from cancer or were survivors of cancer, after which those memorials were pinned to participants' clothing.

The Nome-Beltz girls volleyball team has been an active partner of the Arctic Pinkies for several years. The team recently held a four-team tournament dedicated to raising money for the Arctic Pinkies. Prior to the walk, team members staffed a table where they helped pin ribbons on participants' jackets. There were 17 ribbon colors, each signifying a specific type cancer.

On a circuit route, the large group, led by Police Chief John Papasodora, took up a single lane of Bering Street, Front Street, Steadman Street, and 5th Avenue.

The next fund-raising event planned by the Arctic Pinkies is a lunch with a silent auction on No-

City loans NJUS $2.2 million with strings attached

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome City Council told the administration to keep utility finances under surveillance after they agreed to give Nome Joint Utility Systems a direct loan of $2.2 million from the City savings account to cover a construction funding short-fall that has stressed operating funds.

In a joint work session on Oct. 29, the public learned that delays in filing for grant reimbursement for money already spent on utility work had put a strain on operating funds and left NJUS having to pass the hat.

Because of the drag in getting replacement money, NJUS was left without money for current projects. In discussions between the utility board and council members, NJUS decided to take a loan from the City at 2.5 percent interest.

The Council met immediately after the session and approved the request.

The situation came to a head when Wells Fargo turned down an NJUS application for a line of credit unless NJUS put up collateral.

For years, NJUS has been successful in securing grants plus loans for construction work.

However, the utility, in most cases, has to spend its money to do the work and then receive reimbursement from the state or federal granting agency, meaning NJUS has to front the money for the project.

According to discussions on Oct. 29 and pointed out by an auditor several months ago, paperwork for reimbursement was not filed promptly in some cases.

John K. Handeland, utility manager, attributed late filings to paperwork requirements and to turnover and shortages in staff at the granting agencies.

NJUS has recently rehired Mike Cusack as full-time chief financial

Early election results: Ballot measures pass

Young re-elected, Begich out, governor's race too tight to call

By Diana Haecker

A few hours after the polls closed on election day, preliminary unofficial elections results revealed that Democrat Mark Begich may have lost his U.S. Senate seat to Republican challenger Dan Sullivan.

With 325 out of 441 districts reporting on Tuesday night, it seemed that U.S. Representative Don Young maintained a lead over Democratic challenger Forrest Dunbar.

On election night, the race for Governor was too tight to call. The Unity ticket consisting of Independent candidate Bill Walker and Democrat Byron Mallott seemed to have a lead over incumbent Governor Sean Parnell and his running mate Dan Sullivan.

As of Tuesday night, Walker/Mallott had 47.72 percent of the vote, with Parnell/Sullivan showing 46.84 percent of the vote.

In House District 39, Democrat Neal Foster ran unopposed. With half of the district's precincts reporting, Foster had 97 percent of the

In Senate District T, Democrat Donnie Olson also ran unopposed, with 97.2 percent of the vote.

There were three ballot measures in front of the voters.

Early results indicate that all ballot measures passed. Ballot measure 2 aims to allow the use, purchase and sale of recreational marijuana in Alaska for those aged 21 or older. It now allows the state to tax and regulate the production, sale and use of marijuana in Alaska.

Ballot measure 3 also passed. It will raise Alaska's minimum wage from $7.75 per hour to $8.75 per hour in 2015 and to $9.75 per hour as of January 1, 2016.

A measure to protect Bristol Bay also passed.

The measure now requires the legislature to approve future large-scale metallic sulfide mines in the Bristol Bay Fisheries Reserve by passing a law.

Pilgrim Hot Springs: Power for Nome remains questionable

By Diana Haecker

Test results from a large diameter well at Pilgrim Hot Springs indicate that the well can sustainably provide thermal fluid for onsite power generation and heating applications, says a report from the Alaska Center for Energy and Power released last Friday. For power generation to feed into the Nome power grid, more tests need to be done.

Since 2010, the Alaska Center for Energy and Power has been investigating whether or not the hot springs at Pilgrim, about 40 miles north of Nome, could provide enough volume and heat to produce two megawatts of energy to feed into Nome's power system. The test results are not conclusive, but the next steps are no longer up to ACEP to further research.

ACEP has led an extensive geothermal exploration effort at Pilgrim Hot Springs between 2010 and 2014. In order to understand the geothermal dynamics, where the hot water source is and if there is enough in the aquifer to sustainably feed into a power grid, ACEP researchers have conducted a variety of geophysical surveys. Last fall, they drilled a large diameter production, which was flow-tested in September 2014.

"This was the first time that controlled flow rates greater than the naturally occurring artesian rates were sustained and measured," said the report. "Downhole temperatures and pressures were measured while the well was flowing at 60 gal/min, and while the well was pumped at 172 gal/min and 300 gal/min. The pressure changes that were measured have led researchers to conclude that the well has the ability to sustainably provide thermal fluid for on-site power generation and district heating applications at levels similar to what has been developed at Chena Hot Springs in Alaska."

The researchers said output from this well exceeded initial expectations. However, they cannot definitively confirm the ability of the resource to sustainably generate more than two Megawatts for export to Nome because the fluid was produced from the shallower portion of the aquifer, and not directly above the upflow zone. "We have recommended drilling an additional gradi-

ENERGY FOR PILGRIM HOT SPRINGS— Photographer F. H. Nowell photographed a cabbage patch at Kuzgamapa Hot Springs on July 11, 1907. More than 100 years later, researchers are trying to harness the hot springs energy to generate power for Nome. Recent results indicate that there is enough power to support infrastructure at Pilgrim Hot Springs, but geothermal energy for Nome might be still a pie-in-the-sky scenario.

Bering Sea Alliance trained regional oil spill responders

The Bering Sea Alliance, LLC and UIC Arctic Response Services, LLC teamed up to develop a program for emergency oil spill response, OSR for short, in the Bering Strait region.

Basic OSR training including Hazardous Waste Operations, was provided to over 40 residents of Gambell, Nome, Saint Michael, Unalakleet, and Wales. These residents are all BSA on-call employees and now have the requisite training and certification to be first responders.

Both BSA and UIC ARS are preparing to provide additional OSR training to select BSA employees and other UIC ARS village response team members from several villages of the North Slope Borough. The additional OSR training, named Oil Spill Response Academy, will include learning enhanced response techniques, proper equipment selection, and supervisory requirements. The inaugural Oil Spill Response Academy will be held in early November 2014, at UIC ARS's facilities located in Anchorage.

According to a press release from BSA, the commitment to effective OSR training is "one small step towards building capacity within the coastal villages of Alaska to better safeguard valuable marine resources and the region's subsistence way of

NOAA report finds 2013 U.S. seafood landings and value increased from 2012

In its 2013 annual report, Fisheries of the United States 2013, released last week, NOAA Fisheries announced that U.S. fishermen landed 9.9 billion pounds of fish and shellfish, an increase of 245 million pounds from 2012. Valued at $5.5 billion, these landings represent an increase of $388 million from 2012.

While national total of fish and shellfish landings remained about the same, total landings of wild salmon topped one billion pounds, setting a new record, up 68 percent from 2012. The report also shows that for the 17th consecutive year, the Alaska port of Dutch Harbor led the nation with the highest amount of seafood landed, primarily walleye pollock. Dutch Harbor fishers landed 753 million pounds valued at $197 mil-

Marine aquaculture production in the U.S. has been increasing steadily in recent years, about 10 percent a year from 2008 to 2012, the latest figures available. The top U.S. marine aquaculture species are oysters ($136 million), clams ($99 million) and Atlantic salmon ($77 million).

The report also shows that the average American ate 14.5 pounds of fish and shellfish in 2013, essentially unchanged from 2012.

BOEM releases revised analysis for Chukchi Sea Oil and Gas Lease Sale

Last week, the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM) released the Draft Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement, SEIS for short, for Chukchi Sea Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Lease Sale 193, which may give Shell the green light to proceed test drilling for

BOEM prepared the draft SEIS after an April 24 remand order of the U.S. District Court for the District of Alaska. The original EIS for Lease Sale 193 was published in 2007 and the sale was conducted in 2008. A federal appeals court ruled that the government prepared a flawed environmental review before selling $2.7 billion in Chukchi leases, with Royal Dutch Shell as the leading bidder.

A press release said BOEM used the best available science and worked in close consultation with Alaska Native tribes, federal partner agencies, state and local governments, stakeholders and the public.

BOEM predicts a higher exploration and production scenario than previous analyses, based on a better understanding about existing geologic structures in the region as well as improved information about where industry operators are likely to focus their development activities.

Earlier this year, Interior's Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement issued a suspension of operations for all Chukchi leases issued in Lease Sale 193, which stops the lease term from running while BOEM completes this supplemental environmental review. The suspension remains in effect until BOEM completes its environmental review, as directed by the court.

The Draft Supplemental EIS will be published in the Federal Register on Friday, Nov. 7, followed by a 45day public comment period. The public hearings will be held on Nov. 17 in Kotzebue, on Nov. 18 in Pt. Hope, on Nov. 19 in Pt. Lay, on Nov. 20 in Wainwright, on Dec.1 in Anchorage, on Dec. 3 in Barrow and on Dec. 4 in Fairbanks.

UA museum collaborator under investigation for bird smuggling

By Jeff Richardson Fairbanks Daily News Miner

FAIRBANKS - A longtime contributor of ornithology specimens to the University of Alaska Museum of the North is under investigation for allegedly smuggling birds to add to his vast private collection.

Heinrich "Henry" Springer, 78, a renowned Alaska bird researcher, had his home searched by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in early October to look for illegal specimens and records. According to court documents, it capped more than three years of investigation into alleged smuggling operations by Springer, a former Alaska Board of Game chairman and state legislator.

No charges have been filed since the search warrant was conducted at Springer's Anchorage home on Oct. 7. Federal agents seized about 50 bird specimens and a variety of paper and electronic records, according to property receipts filed after the search was conducted.

In a 41-page search warrant application, U.S. Fish and Wildlife agents say they are investigating whether Springer used the museum's permit to illegally smuggle specimens for his private collection, which includes more than 5,000 birds. According to the application, that includes at least 48 specimens he allegedly purchased in violation of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act, which prohibits the importation of protected birds.

An Anchorage attorney representing Springer didn't respond to a request for comment on Friday.

spokeswoman Marmian Grimes said Springer has been affiliated with the UA museum since the 1950s. His name was removed from the UA permit when UAF learned of the investigation, she said.

She didn't know how many bird specimens he had imported on the museum's behalf but said his work has been prolific.

"He's been a longstanding contributor to the museum's collection," Grimes said.

The University of Alaska Board of Regents named the museum's ornithology lab after Springer in 2008. In a UAF news release marking that occasion, museum bird curator Kevin Winker praised Springer as "a classic 19th century naturalist" and an expert on international permitting.

Gov. Steve Cowper appointed Springer to the Alaska Board of Game in 1989, and his three-year term included time as the board's chairman. He also served in the state House, representing Nome as a De-officer. Cusack has made processing pay requests and billings to outside entities a priority— projects for the Port of Nome, state, and various other smaller billable services. He has also stepped up monthly utility billing collections, Handeland said.

NJUS has, also for years, enjoyed a revolving line of credit with Wells Fargo for grant anticipation for construction projects. For several projects in the past couple of years, the line was set at $10 million, which expired at the end of 2013. For months; NJUS has been in discussions with Wells Fargo to renew the line of credit for $4 million. No dice, said Wells Fargo, until the existing line of $10 million was paid off, according to Handeland.

"We have been reimbursed and paid down the majority of the line: balance was $8.25 million at the beginning of the year, as of September $805,700 and as of October, the remaining balance is $292,290," Handeland said in a statement.

He anticipated the final payment will be covered by a final billing due from state Dept. of Transportation for utility location, bringing the credit line to zero this month.

Without a line of credit during construction activity, NJUS has had to dip into operating funds to meet payments it could not delay on grant activity—payroll, supplies and services—resulting in making requests to delay some Wells Fargo fuel payments and to some vendors.

During a meeting late last month with Wells Fargo's local staff and Anchorage credit managers, NJUS staff and NJUS Board Vice Chair Carl Emmons discussed NJUS operations, grants and finances. Wells Fargo stated NJUS would have to provide security to renew a credit line based on fuel payments and the utility's year-to-date operating results varying from its budget plan.

Finances Director Julie Liew voiced alarm at the situation, observing that the City's credit rating could be affected by the bank's de-

She had looked at revenue expenditures for 2013 and part of 2014 and had concerns, Liew said. One was that it appeared that some grants had been overspent. She suggested that the City and NJUS combine accounting systems.

Part of the situation was beyond NJUS control, Handeland said.

"It is an unfortunate situation for which we have to work on a solution. It is not time to jump out of the boat but to bail harder and harder," he said. "We want to get this behind us as quickly as we can."

The utility is part of the City but maintains its own budget and financial records. Handeland estimated the utility would need the loan's final pay-off to come due July 15 next

Council members voiced a desire to not have the credit line open-

City Manager Josie Bahnke wanted it made clear that the money the City was loaning NJUS came out of a savings account securing the City's self insurance and money kept as backup for the state Professional Employees Retirement System (PERS)

Councilman Stan Andersen wanted the Council to keep tabs on utility financial operations. That included a look at the 2013-2014 payroll figures, accounts payable and receivable, utility construction costs, revenues and expenses, and grants and loans information.

When the City replaces Wells Fargo as creditor, "we are picking up the risk and responsibility," Councilman Jerald Brown observed.

NJUS board members agreed that the transactions between utility and the City should be open and transparent and observed that the utility's books had always been open to the Čity staff will monitor grants reimbursements and loan repayments.

The financial crunch NJUS is experiencing emphasized the utility's need for a rates analyst to look at current electrical rates to customers that had not been revised since the mid-1990s, said Handeland. NJUS recently adjusted water and sewer rates upward. Energy generated from wind turbines has cut fuel requirements, but does not affect fixed costs, Handeland said.

Revenue from electrical power sales has been falling for various reasons. Energy conservation by ratepayers and reductions in usage by Rock Creek Mine, for example, affect the utility's ability to meet operating costs.

"I would raise the rates now and then have a rate study," Andersen said. He had realized the need in discussions with Handeland, and could see a hike of three cents a kilowatt. That would add $15 on a usage of 500 kwh per month. Power Cost Equalization funds meant to bring down rates when high-energy costs affect the first 500 kwh on monthly

"Before we raise rates, I want to do everything to cut costs, "said Carl Emmons, utility board member. "We have an obligation to do that."

Utility board president Berda Wilson agreed. "We need to clean our own house first," she said.

Two sled dogs injured in musk ox attack

By Diana Haecker

On Saturday, Oct. 25, a lone musk ox bull injured two members of Nome musher Kirsten Bey's dog team kennel.

The dogs, a male named "Varden" and a female named "Q", were severely injured and had to be flown to an Anchorage 24/7 emergency animal hospital, where they underwent surgeries. Both survived and are recovering from their injuries.

Kirsten Bey keeps her sled dog team at a kennel located next to the Nome-Beltz Highway. When she drove from her home to the kennel at 9 a.m. everything seemed fine at the dog yard. She let 15-year old dog Varden out of the barn, where he spends the night, and began preparing the morning feeding in the adjacent house that functions as a dog

"Suddenly I heard a big ruckus in the dog yard, but that's not unusual as the dogs sometimes bark when a fox runs by or a person walks along the bike path," Bey said. The yard quieted down so Bey went outside with the food buckets to begin the morning feeding. That's when she noticed that something was wrong with Varden. "He had a rip in the shoulder. It wasn't bleeding much and I thought it was weird that one of my dogs would've bitten him." Bey said. After she was done feeding, one of her dogs began barking intently at the willow brush on the west side of the dog yard. Toward the west side, the yard is surrounded by thick willows and a steep drop off to Bourbon Creek

tially Bey didn't see the cause of the dog's barking but then noticed a musk ox standing in the midst of the willow brush next to her dog yard.

"It was just standing there. I thought, oh, this is bad," Bey told the Nome Nugget. She immediately began moving the dogs closest to the brush into the dog shop.

Then she called the Nome Police Department. According to Bey, a NPD officer came quickly but when he saw the musk ox, he wasn't sure what the best course of action would be. The officer called the dispatcher for additional assistance; an Alaska State Trooper arrived on scene to help out. According to the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game office in Nome, no ADF&G official was called to respond to this incident. The NPD officer moved his vehicle closer to the brush, shone lights at the musk ox and ran the siren. Bey said, the trooper added to the noise and tried pepper spray but the musk ox was not fazed by these efforts to encourage him to leave the site. Eventually, the bull walked off.

With the musk ox gone, Bey discovered her female dog Q hiding in her dog house. The musk ox had ripped into her groin and there were big tears in her skin. Bey assessed the damage and decided to take her two sled dogs to Anchorage that night for emergency treatment. The dogs had shared many miles of trail with Bey, including Bey's participation in the 2008 100th anniversary of the All Alaska Sweepstakes. Bey boarded the night flight to Anchor-

The search warrant application states that Springer "has a history of importing bird specimens in violation of federal law." In 2001 and 2002, he was found to have imported migratory birds without permits and had two separate violations again in 2009, according to the warrant application. All of the birds were forfeited to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service over Springer's objections.

The search warrant application indicates that federal agents have investigated Springer in the current case since January 2011.

During a tour of his collection as the investigation occurred, Springer reportedly pointed out a threatened Steller's eider to an undercover agent, saying he shot the bird during a hunting trip to Nome. He said his "scheme" is to leave illegal birds unlabeled to emphasize that "I know nothing," according to quotes in the court documents.

"It must have been illegal, because I don't put a label on it," he said, according to the warrant application.

Springer also reportedly told agents he had bribed a Mexican customs official who seemed to discover that a turkey skin had been stuffed with bird specimens that were illegal to import. Springer also allegedly boasted that he and a friend had gone on a hunting trip to Peru and smuggled dozens of prohibited specimens back into the U.S.

He reportedly told an undercover agent that unorganized Peruvian officials "don't even know what's going on. They're so rare down there, they don't even know yet. We're not even on the radar screen.'

Springer also reportedly stated last February that he was about to bring about 150 birds back from Germany, saying "if they're problem birds, I just give them a new name.'

Grimes said she didn't know whether the UA museum's migratory bird permit may be affected by the investigation. She said UAF has cooperated with federal agents.

"We don't have any information to indicate we're the focus of the investigation," she said.

age and took the dogs to the Denali Animal Hospital. After exams, the dogs underwent surgery in the wee hours of Sunday morning. Surgeons operated on Varden for 45 minutes, and on Q for two hours. Both animals are expected to fully recover. "My dogs were lucky," Bey said.

Other animals attacked by musk oxen this summer were not so fortunate. Mitch Erickson's dog Onslow died after a musk ox tore into his belly on July 26, at a communal sled dog yard on Nome Gold Alaska land. Gary and Laura Samuelson's dog Bernard was gored to death by a musk ox next to their residence on Port Road. ADF&G area biologist Tony Gorn said a jogger reported his dog being lost on Anvil Mountain during a run; when the dog reappeared, it bore injuries consistent with a musk ox attack.

Gorn was surprised to hear of the attack on Kirsten Bey's dog. To Gorn's knowledge ADF&G staff was not notified. That it occurred so late in the year, when the animals usually have moved out of Nome to higher grounds in the surrounding hills, stumped the biologist. Regarding the latest attack, Gorn said he continues to stress to dog team owners to put up barricades around their kennels. Bey had followed that advice and, during the summer, had fortified her kennel with tripods and other barriers. Since musk ox attacks in the past occurred mostly in the summer and early fall, the barriers were removed. Between May 21 and July 17, Gorn responded to 16 after hour calls (between 11 p.m. and 5 a.m.) related to nuisance wildlife. Two of the calls dealt with brown bears, 11 calls were related to musk oxen. After July 17, the musk oxen calls slowed down, Gorn said.

As for protocol, Gorn said that the best way to get hold of the authorities is to call the Nome Police Department. "The reason why we set it up this way is because there is always somebody there at the dispatch office," Gorn said. "They have a list of people to contact and my name is the first on the list of people from ADF&G."

Asked about measures that could be taken to deal with the conflict between musk oxen and dogs in Nome, Gorn recommends fences. "We try to think of different ways for people to build barriers and fences around their dog kennels," Gorn said.

Nome Police Chief John Papasodora said in an email to the Nome Nugget that when NPD got to the scene, the musk ox was in the brush and was not attacking or damaging anything. It was only later that NPD learned about the dogs' injuries. Papasodora echoed the protocol to call NPD. "In nearly all instances, we will be the point of contact as we are available 24/7," Papasodora wrote. "Response will be based on available personnel and call volume, but we will respond as soon as possible. The public is welcome to call Fish and Game during normal business hours. Obviously if the situation is outside the City, the first call should be to AST, who will coordinate resources as necessary."

High School students sample health careers

By Sarah Miller

High school students at Nome-Beltz are receiving a taste of college-level instruction through the Health Careers class that is being offered for dual credit through Northwest Campus.

Taught by Rhonda Schneider and Phil Hofstetter of NSHC, the course is offered at the high school. It provides students with two college credits as well as certification in CPR/First Aid. It is intended to provide high schoolers with an introduction to the wide range of possibilities in health careers and opportunities available here in Nome. The focus for this cohort has been the hospital's implementation of electronic health records," explained Schneider. "This is a unique, onetime event that helps students understand the future of technology in health care." The class has been visited by guest speakers who have traveled to Nome to support the hospital's transition to a fully electronic system, as well as by regular hospital employees in every aspect of the hospital's operation, from direct patient care to specialized therapy, from physical plant maintenance, to finance and legal operations. Schneider and Hofstetter are enthusiastic about the course and its mutual potential for students and for NSHC. "I'm really enjoying it," said Hofstetter. "One of our goals is to grow our own employees and this is one way to do it. We can provide the students with exposure and opportunities to any career path they want to

"It's been really interesting," said student Bethany Horton, a junior interested in becoming a dental hygienist or dental therapist. "I like hearing all the people talking about their careers, their love for their jobs, and how they got there." Horton will participate in a summer internship at NSHC's dental clinic, which will help her to enter directly into the job field after completing high school. College plans are down the road a bit, said Horton.

Other opportunities provided through the course include a trip to the CERNER conference, along with other NSHC staff in Kansas City, for essay winner and student Jacqueline Morgan. CERNER is the company that developed the EHR system used by NSHC for patient records. Morgan will attend seminars that showcase the use of technology in health care.

"Students are getting hands on training in this course," said Schneider. "They've handled live organs such as a moose heart and lungs. They're learning to take vitals, and they did this year's hearing screenings at the elementary school."

The course assignments include group projects and presentations, in which students are assigned coworkers.

"In real life, you don't get to pick your co-workers," said Schneider. "This way, students learn to work with kids they may not know very well. You see different leaders emerge."

In order to earn the college-level credits offered by the course, students are held to college-level standards.

"Students are graded on completing their assignments on time, attending class regularly, and on participation. There are no exceptions given, not even for absences excused by the high school. They are expected to follow up on their own missing assignments and to ask for information they might miss if they are absent from class," said Schneider.

About half of the students enrolled in the class are already decided on their career paths in the medical field, but others just wanted to have the college experience, said Schneider.

At a recent class, the students heard a presentation about communication from hospital vice president Hofstetter, who described the importance of communicating appropriately in all forms, verbal, non-verbal, written, and electronic, a form especially relevant to this generation. "How you articulate yourself is crucial and it starts now. There is an electronic record of every email or text you send," he explained to students. "The spotlight is on you, especially if you are in a higher level position in your profession. You need to be aware of your actions, your presentation, your behavior, your professionalism, and your attention, or inattention as the case may be." Hofstetter made the presentation engaging to students by sharing personal experiences and pitfalls in communication. The importance of strong communication in the delivery of health care was the takeaway for students in this course. "The information you are giving to patients is so important. This is about their health, disease, education of their treatment. You need to be accurate, and appropriate in showing empathy and sympathy. You need to know your patient's background and adjust your communication appropriately. People in health care fields have to know the information and practice their communication skills. What you do or say, versus the other person's perception of that, can be really different.

Students also heard from NSHC social worker Christine Schultz. Schultz also functions as a hospital administrator, coordinating spiritual support, medical social work services, organizing language interpreters, the patient and family lodging system, and referrals to community services for patients. "You never know where your work will lead you, so you have to be open," described Schultz of her profession. "As a social worker, I interact with every aspect of the hospital- inpatient and outpatient care, long term care, law enforcement, advocacy, the court system."

Schultz presented the training and degrees required for medical social work, but focused on the variety of duties that the profession can come to encompass. "It all depends on the needs. You have to look at the whole patient and help them figure out what's happening in their world, and how to make that work for their health. It's important to be flexible. Your job duties may not match your job description, especially in a rural area like this where resources are limited." Creativity in identifying the resources that can be used to fill a need weaving together a system that supports the patient and family is essential. Students learned that a medical social worker is the go-to resource person that is sought out when patients need support and services outside of the hospital. "She's the one we rely on for all of the tough stuff at the hospital," commented Hofstetter.

Visits such as Schultz's are eyeopening to students, who may not have any knowledge or first-hand experience of hospital personnel other than the receptionists, nurses, and physicians they encounter in the clinic. The Health Careers course provides students with a window into the hospital's broad functions and services, and helps them direct their goals and interests into areas they may not have imagined as careers for themselves. "It's so energizing for us too," said Schneider. "This is one of the best parts of my job."

Homeschoolers participate in moose heart dissection

By Sophia Hobbs

On Tuesday, October 21 two groups of homeschoolers gathered at the Health Aide Training building with Dr. Nora Nagaruk for a moose heart dissection.

Dr. Nagaruk dissected the moose heart to show us the four chambers of heart; the right atrium, the left atrium, the right ventricle, and the left ventricle. First let's talk about the right side of the heart. The right side of the heart is the side that receives the deoxygenated blood. This blood is also called "venous blood".

Venous blood carries the waste product carbon dioxide from the tissues to the lungs to be exhaled. The blood enters the heart through the Superior and Inferior Vena cavae, which leads to the right atrium. When the heart beats the blood is then pumped through the Tricuspid valve into the right ventricle. From there it is pumped through the pulmonary valve and into the pulmonary artery, which carries the blood to the lungs.

The left side of the heart receives oxygenated blood into the left atrium via the pulmonary veins. The blood is then pumped through the Mitral valve into the left ventricle. From there it is propelled through the aortic valve into the aorta, and then to the rest of the body.

One very interesting thing about the left side of the heart is that its muscle wall is thicker than the right side of the heart. This is because it has to pump a lot harder to make sure that the oxygenated blood reaches the extremities of the body. The heart beats at about 72 beats per minute when you are inactive. However, when you exercise, it temporarily increases your heart rate. But if you do exercise it lowers the heart rate when you rest making for a more satisfying rest.

Dr. Nagaruk explained that the electrical impulses that make your heart beat are sent from the Sinoatrial node, which makes the atria contract, and the Atrioventricular node, which makes the ventricles contract. These two nodes are known simply as the SA node in the AV node. First the SA node fires its electrical charge which is carried throughout the atria by special pathways.

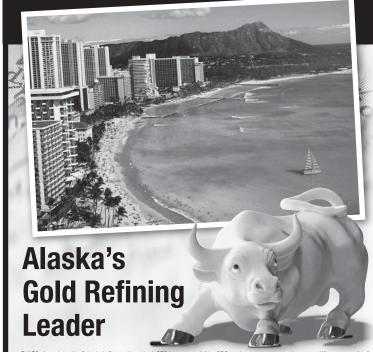

When the charge hits the AV node it fires its charge which is conducted through the ventricles. The amount of time that it takes the SA node charge to reach the AV node is about 50 milliseconds.

This was one of my favorite field trips. I learned a lot and was amazed to learn how my heart works. And it was just cool to see and touch a moose heart.

Nome students "Get Up and Stand Up"

By Nancy Bahnke

First Alaskans Institute recently held their 30th anniversary Elders and Youth Conference in Anchorage October 20-22. The conference theme was "Get Up! Stand Up!" Six Nome-Beltz Sr. High School students had the privilege to attend this annual event. The students were freshman Sierra Tucker, sophomores Tim Bloodgood and Tatiana Chanar, junior Tehya Tucker and seniors Josh Gologregen and Jannelle Trowbridge.

The conference agenda had a variety of engaging activities for the youth to attend. Also, there were many different dance groups, including the Ida'ina Dancers and Ovluaq Dance group. Our students proudly danced during the invitational dances. Senator Lisa Murkowski, Senator Mark Begich, and Representative Don Young spoke about the importance of getinvolved in your community. Other speakers presented on the importance of culture and language. There were breakout sessions by region. During the Bering Strait session, Tehya Tucker was elected as the Bering Strait region's student representative in the planning of next year's Elders and Youth Conference.

One of the highlights of the events for many students was the Men's and Women's House, whose topic was respect for culture and standing up for your values. Men and women were separated and elders had a chance to share their wisdom, stories and challenges with the younger generation. In return, students asked questions, learned and discussed challenges of their own to the elders.

The youth also had a unique opportunity to be involved in the inner workings of the conference. Through the Young Masters of Ceremony program, all of Nome's students were able to introduce guest speakers and presenters during the main presentations. They also all took part in the Young Ambassador's program: being guides to workshops, serving coffee and drinks and getting to know elders from all over Alaska. Several of our students were also interviewed for televison and various agencies about the importance of the conference and what it meant to them.

To add a bonus to this wonderful culturally-enriching experience, Nome youth were selected to present during a workshop session. Nome Youth: Standing Up for Healthy Communities was their presentation title. During the presentation, the

Alaska Association of School Board presented about its partnership with Nome Public Schools and community engagement, Panganga Pungowiyi presented about Kawerak Wellness and its involvement within the school and community; Nome Native Youth Leadership Organization and JROTC spoke about how they have been empowered to make positive changes in the community of Nome

After the conference, Nome students left energized and ready to bring back what they had learned. "My eyes were opened to how important our connection is to elders and how you become who you are and lead into who you want to be,' Sierra said. "One thing I learned is the importance of having to talk to each other and standing up for things that are important and things you want to see changed," was Tehya's comment. Jannelle echoed that idea saying she learned the "importance of connection and communication. Every individual needs support. It's about helping others discover their skills." Tatiana enjoyed "not just a sense of being together but a sense of being part of a community." Josh also learned a lot especially through the elders "sharing their stories and

School Board impressed with local youth leaders

By Kristine McRae

The Nome Board of Education met for its regular work session last Tuesday, at which they were treated to a presentation by five Nome-Beltz students who attended this year's First Alaskans Elders and Youth conference in Anchorage.

Tehya Tucker, Janelle Trowbridge, Joshua Gologergon, Sierra Tucker, and Tatiana Chanar talked about their experiences sharing and learning with other youth leaders from around the state. The youth talked about the valuable sessions they attended, as well as the camaraderie and support they felt. "The overall experience was beyond amazing," Tatiana told the board. "We developed a connection; in just a few days we became like family." Joshua added, "Thank you, to the community, for raising us to be leaders."

Marsha Sloan from Nome Eskimo Community shared a report in which an outside evaluator reviewed the first year of classroom implementation of the Alaska Native Education Grant from the Department of Education. The report includes testing scores and will be used for planning purposes to develop the program, Sloan said.

Superintendant Steve Gast brought the NPS Strategic Plan to the board's attention. "The last time we did an official update was October of last year," Gast said. "We want to spend some time talking about the future of the plan and whether we want to revise." The board agreed that the plan would likely need updating, and they would like it to reflect all the recent and current activities taking place around the district.

Board member Jennifer Reader asked for clarification on the district's policy concerning lice. Elementary school principal Paul Clark was at the meeting and explained that if a case of lice is detected, the school immediately contacts the parent to alert them. "It can be hard on kids, socially," Clark said. "I've never seen a case where the parent hasn't come right away to pick up their child." The board agreed to investigate any necessary legality surrounding the creation of a policy. "I would like to see a policy that addresses the public health concern that would occur if we allow the child/children to remain in school, Reader said. The next regular school board meeting is on November 11.

Nome swimmers attend regional swim meet in Fairbanks

By Kirsten Bey

Last weekend, two Nome-Beltz swimmers, senior Lacy Erickson and freshman Madison Johnson, traveled to Fairbanks to participate in the regional swim meet. Nome is in Region Six in which all region high schools compete against each other, regardless of size. In this case, the Nome swimmers competed with swimmers from the much bigger schools in the Fairbanks area..

Lacy Erickson finished 9th overall in the 50-yard freestyle event. After the preliminary events, she was in 10th place and even bettered her performance in the final event. In the 100-yard freestyle event, Erickson moved up from 8th position to 7th position during the course of the competition. This marked a good end to her high school swimming career.

Madison Johnson, a freshman, participated in her first high school regional swim meet. She reports that she was very nervous, but not so nervous to false start. Madison finished 15th in the 50-yard freestyle event. She finished the 100-yard breaststroke event in 10th place, doing well enough to swim in the finals of that event.

Only a very small number of swimmers were on the Nome team this year. Because each was at a different level of competition, each had to be self motivated to succeed, training with no team level competitors on a day to day basis. The members of the high school swim team demonstrated good personal discipline and worked hard this year.

Nome volleyballers end regular season in second place

By Keith Conger

On the final weekend before the Western Conference Championships, the Nome-Beltz volleyball team traveled to Barrow hoping to present one last piece of evidence to gain the top seed for the upcoming regional tournament. They needed wins against both the Whalers and the Bethel Warriors. Nome's only blemishes to their conference record were three early season losses to the Kotzebue Huskies. A 3-1 loss to the host Whalers on Saturday evening, however, helped establish the final "order on the court."

The number one seed was earned by Kotzebue, which was idle last weekend. The Huskies lofty 5-1 regular season conference record helped establish its place at the top. Kotzebue drew first round championship match next weekend against the fourth seeded Bethel Warriors, who remain winless in conference play.

The defending Western Conference champion Nanooks defeated Barrow earlier in the season 3-0 in their only meeting. They are the sole team in conference to have beaten the Huskies. The loss to Barrow on Saturday, coupled with a win the previous day against the Warriors, left the Nanooks with a 5-4 regular season conference record. A first round rematch between the number two seed Nanooks and the number three seed Whalers will take place next Friday at 1:30 in the Nome-Beltz gym.

The tournament in Barrow had a volleyball family reunion appearance. Nome, Barrow, Bethel, and the Dillingham Wolverines were all once members of the old 1A, 2A, 3A West state tournament structure. The four teams combined for a total of eight state titles during the 12 years of the former tournament's existence.

Nome started the weekend by losing to Dillingham. The Nanooks had beaten the Wolverines in the final of the 1999 1A, 2A, 3A state tournament. After a resounding 25-15 first set victory, in which senior Alyssa Bushey served 15 straight points, the Nanooks were outscored in three of the next four sets.

The Dillingham/Barrow contest was another rematch of former 1A, 2A, 3A state finalists. The Whalers beat Dillingham for state titles in both 2003 and 2005, and were able to beat the Wolverines this past weekend, 3-0.

Dillingham's decline in student population dropped them to 2A status a few years ago. The Wolverines have responded well to the change. They added a 2A state trophy in 2012 to the 1A, 2A, 3A state championships they earned in 2000 and 2004.

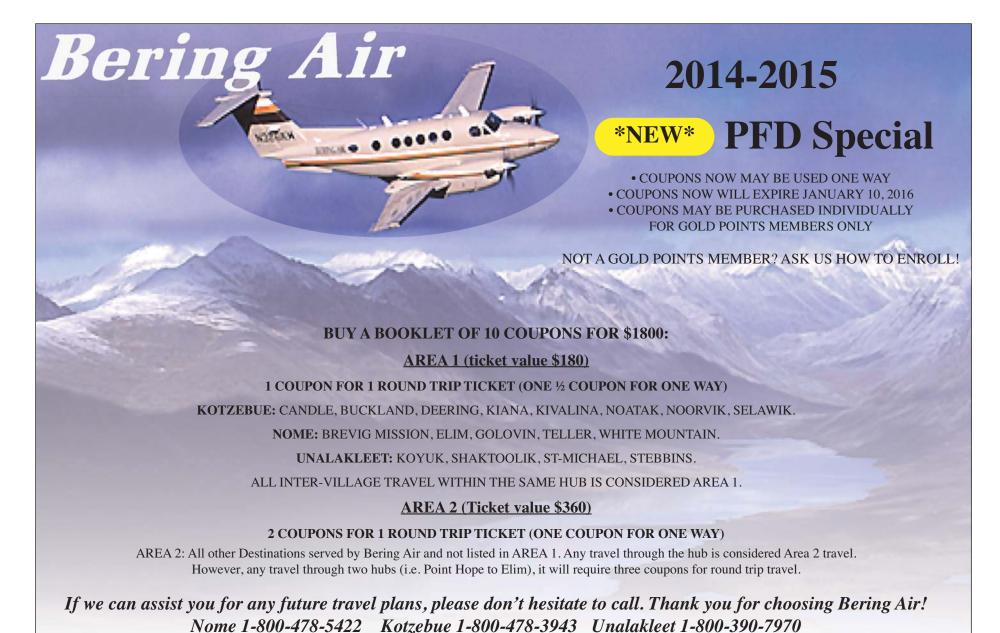

Bethel was hoping to create a little nostalgia of its own in its match against Barrow. The Warriors beat the Whalers for a state championship in 2007. The Whalers, however, had too much firepower on Saturday, beating the Warriors 3-0.

During the weekend, the Hutchinson Hawks played the role of the cosmopolitan distant cousins. The Nome girls were well acquainted with the Hawks, having lost to them in a tough 2013 state tournament match. The Hawks capped their first trip to the 3A state championships last year with a fourth place finish. This past weekend they did not lose a single set, taking home the first place trophy. Nanooks' coach Lucas Frost puts the Hawks in with the top five toughest 3A schools in the state this year.

Frost said by email that Allaryce Agloinga and Kim Clark led the Nanooks hitters in Barrow. He said the team is looking forward to playing in front of the home crowd next weekend.

Two of the four teams playing in next week's Western Conference Championship will advance to the state 3A tournament. The larger Western Alaskan schools joined the rest of the Alaskan 3A schools in 2009. Barrow has earned one of the two qualification spots each year. The Whalers are guided by 13-year veteran, and coaching legend, Seeseei Pili, who helped pilot the Whalers to four state championships under the old format. Pili said by email that she thinks her team is peaking at the right time.

The Nome-Beltz volleyball girls have won the last two Western Conference tournaments. They will begin defense of their title in front of their home crowd on Friday at 1:30 p. m. Kotzebue will play Bethel at 3:00 p.m. The championship match will take place on Friday at 8:00 p.m. The tournament follows a double-elimination format, and will have a match for the second state-bound team on Saturday at 3:00 p.m.

Nome-Beltz wrestlers take eighth at prestigious ACS Invitational

by Keith Conger

The Nome-Beltz wrestling team took to the mat last weekend at the Anchorage Christian Schools (ACS) Wrestling Invitational. Thirty teams from around the state were present for the event, including 4A squads from Ketchikan and Thunder Mountain. Four Nanook wrestlers placed in the top six. Three of them earned a spot in the championship finals.

Nome was led by Emery Booshu who, after beginning the season in the 152- pound weight class, moved down to the 145-pound class. Booshu went undefeated in his championship bracket, recording three falls along the way. He had a close match with John Brooks of Petersburg in the semifinal, winning by a 12 – 11 margin. He met rival Ğary Eakin of Kotzebue in the final match and was able to hold on for a 15-9decision. Booshu was honored as the Outstanding Wrestler of the tournament.

Leif Erikson started the event by recording three straight falls. Erikson, wrestling in the 138pound class, defeated eventual third place finisher Timmy Woo of Homer, 7-5 in a tight semifinal match. He met up with Marcus Martin of 4A Ketchikan in the final. He lost 3 - 1, but claimed second place.

James Horner joined the Nanooks "three-fall" club on the way to qualifying for the championship match in the 152-pound classification. Horner followed his three straight pins with a blow out victory over Ben Phillips of Kotzebue recording a major decision, 10 - 1. Horner ended up in second place, losing 3 – 0 to the Kotzebue Huskies' Spencer Woods

Nome-Beltz wrestler Oliver Hoogendorn placed fourth in the 182-pound division. He advanced to the semi-final with a resounding 9 - 0 major decision over Sam Wilt of Hutchinson. For the second straight weekend, however, Hoogendorn was eliminated by a powerhouse wrestler from Kotzebue. Hoogendorn's opponent at last week's Nome Invitational, Zach Haviland, moved down to the 170pound classification in which he took first place. The Huskies were able to replace him with defending state champion Josh Roetman. Roetman was able to pin Hoogendorn, and then Cody Howard of Cordova in the final match, to take first place in the Several weight classes had more wrestlers than spots in that bracket, resulting in preliminary qualification rounds. Nome's Jason Gilder was able to reach the championship round by registering a fall over Jaysen Haugen of Unalakleet. He went on to pin both Drew Benton of Holy Rosary Academy and Kotzebue's Harry Baldwin in the consolation rounds.

Nanook Gabe Smith was also forced to work his way into the championship bracket. Smith advanced in the 145-pound division with a 8 - 4 decision over Jonah Coats of Valdez. Smith went on to win three matches, including a pin of Zachary Chaliak of Nunapitchuk in the consolation rounds.

Other Nanook matches of note were Nolan Horner's 49 second pin of Bristol Bay's Ty Desoto in the 195-pound classification and Timothy James' 6 - 0 decision over Andrew Pennison of Nikiski.

Rounding out the Nanook team were Ethan Kelso in the 160-pound class, and Donald Smith and Zac Tozier in the 220-pound division.

The ACS meet was the first tournament the Nanooks have taken part in this year in which team scores were kept. The combined efforts of all the Nanook wrestlers resulted in 107.5 points and an eighth place finish for the team. Kotzebue had a whopping eleven wrestlers place in the top 6; they ran away with the first place trophy with a score of 257.5 points. They scored 83 points more than the defending state champion Bethel Warriors, who had eight wrestlers place in the top six. The Warriors' three tournament champions all came in weight divisions of 120 pounds or lighter. Three of the four Huskies' tournament champions were in weight classes above 152 pounds.

Due to current statewide scheduling challenges, three 4A schools from Southeast Alaska will be allowed to compete in this year's 1A, 2A, 3A state tournament. Both Ketchikan and Thunder Mountain were at the ACS Wrestling Invitational testing the waters. According to the Alaska School Activities Association website, this is a one year occurrence.

Nome-Beltz coach Dudley Homelvig stated in a phone interview that he is looking forward to Nanooks filling spots in lower weight classes in future meets. The Nanooks team has three wrestlers in weight classes 132 pounds or lighter. Each member of this year's Nome high school team has competed at the 138-pound classification or

Of regional note, Everson Paniptchuk of Shaktoolik placed fourth in the 113- pound classification. He defeated Triston Chaney of Dillingham 19 – 3 and Matt DeBilt of Quinhagak to advance to the semi-finals. In the Championship brackets, John Rochon of Unalakleet competed in the 98-pound class; Tyler Takak competed in the 195 pound weight classification.

Nome-Beltz Nanook wrestlers will compete next weekend at the Bush Brawl in Kotzebue.

OUTSTANDING - Nome's Emery Booshu won the 145-pound weight classification at the ACS Invitational last weekend in Anchorage. Booshu, a three-time state wrestling champion, was awarded with Outstanding Wrestler honors after the meet.

The skill of translation revealed at NWC

By Sarah Miller

On a recentb Wednesday evening at Northwest Campus, adult students and their instructor, Marjorie Tahbone, discussed the nuances of translation, context, and implied meanings embedded within seemingly simple phrases. Ikka, avva, and amma are all phrases that translate literally as "over there", but refer to different characteristics or properties of the object, setting, or event. Ikka is a visible object, not moving nor extended, away from the speaker and the listener. Avva is visible and moving, away from the speaker and listener. Amma is not visible, away from the speaker and listener, and located on the other side of a barrier. "It really depends on the conversation. If it's in reference to a certain event, or a memory, then you know exactly where "over there" is," explained Tahbone. "It gets complicated."

Over the course of the evening, students learned common phrases in Inupiaq for greetings, farewells, and common questions and answers. The conversation then turned to a discussion of "nigipiaq," which translates as "real food." Students learned the vocabulary of traditional Eskimo foods such as muktaq, muktuk, and muktaaq, all words for whale meat, which vary according to the specific type of whale. As the vocabulary list filled the board and conversation meandered between words and translations, it became apparent how the component of culture is integral to learning the language of the Inupiat people. "I consider myself to be a culturebearer," explained Tahbone.

Tahbone began studying Inupiag six years ago at UAF. "I'm not even close to fluent. I'm probably close to breaking a second grader's level of fluency," commented Tahbone. "Inupiaq is very complex and context-specific. I'm at the mercy of my students' comments. Who am I to teach this? I let the class know that we are learning together. It helps them feel more comfortable, and they own their learning more." Tahbone is teaching two sections of the class: one offered at night for adults, and the other offered through Nome-Beltz as a dual-credit elective. Her students include high schoolers of Native ancestry, as well as coworkers from KNOM, Kawerak, and other community members interested in understanding the cultural history and background of the Bering Strait region.

Having a cultural background helps with acquiring the language, Tahbone acknowledges. "I grew up with the culture of the Inupiat people, the mannerisms, the etiquette, and the norms of how to converse with people, how to prepare and eat food, and so on." Tahbone also studied abroad in Nunavut, Canada, as well as different parts of Alaska, where she acquired language by a process of learning cultural skills and techniques unique to each location. She has used her personal experiences to design a class that is engaging and interesting to her students. Instruction in the class is not limited to dry lists of words and conjugations. "The learning of the language is easier and more fun when there is purpose, passion, and interest tied to it. You don't just learn words in Inupiaq. The language and the culture are interconnected."

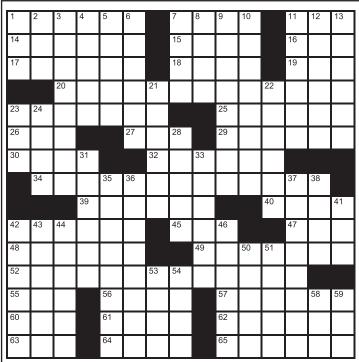

Tahbone draws on her relationships with elders and experts in Inupiaq language and culture to teach her students. "The elders include my grandmother, my instructors, and mentors. Being an elder doesn't necessarily mean they are old. They are people who are knowledgeable. One of Tahbone's goals in helping students to learn the Inupiag language is to bridge the gap between the traditional culture of the elders and the modern culture of the younger generations. "I'm incorporating technology into the classes, teaching students how to translate slang and even texting into Inupiaq. It's an evolving language." Tahbone also instructs students in the cultural norms and etiquette of communication with elders. "Speak slowly. Never text!" she directs the students.

For last week's class, Tahbone researched and introduced Eskimo string games and stories into the lesson, as well as legends and stories about mythical creatures to tie in with Halloween. Students heard about creatures such as the "Ishigaq", tiny mischievous people, the 'Mahaha'' a creature with long fingers who tickles his victims until they suffocate from laughter, the "Quppqugiaq" a giant, ten-legged polar bear, and the "Amautalik," a kidnapper whose diet includes children. Tahbone explained the purpose of the stories, which was to teach the community's values and morals, as well as safety lessons, to children. Because of the area's greater contact with Westerners, the stories are not as commonly known in Nome as in Wales, St. Lawrence, or King Island, said Tahbone. "Some stories are just not shared at all," she continued. "The elders consider them sacred, or they are trying to protect them from being copied or altered by outsiders." It's also a remnant of the environment in which many of the elders were raised, where traditional Native cultural practices were suppressed by the education system. "There's so much knowledge not being passed on to future generations. It was that way when I was in school, too," said Tahbone. "I want others to know about it. It started as an obligation, but now has become my love and my (left)

Anthony "Tony" Robert Castel Eskimo name "Ootoya"

Tony was born May 6, 1972 to Katherine and the late Peter Castel in Fort Wainwright outside of Fairbanks. Being the youngest child and only boy, his sisters called him Baby Brother. Soon all the neighborhood kids called him Baby Brother. The family moved back to Nome in 1977. Upon starting first grade, Tony met his best friend Chris Analoak. They were inseparable and "adopted" each other as brothers. Thank you Chris for being there, we love you for that.

Tony attended Nome Public Schools before going to Oregon to learn carpentry. But his passion was automobiles; he worked as an auto mechanic for many years.

Buying Time

All too soon we will be celebrating the beginning of 2015. An old song says: "Time keeps on slipping, slipping, into the future." As a matter of perspective, the older we grow, the faster time seems to move. When I was a kid, it seemed Christmas would never come. Now, the years seem to be flying by so quickly.

There is a Biblical admonition that says we would be wise to redeem the time, because the days are evil. I believe the meaning of this word is to make the most of every opportunity afforded us to choose the right and live according to the will of God. Theologians call our earthly time probation. The meaning is that we have been gifted with an opportunity to decide how we will relate to God. We have two choices; receive him on his terms or reject him and bear the consequences of separation from him.

Yesterday is gone forever, and tomorrow may never come. So, we have this moment to make decisions that will affect the rest of our life here and for all eternity.

Take the angels! They had a probationary time to decide their fate. Jude tells us they kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. They had time to make the decision to stay in heaven with God or to be banished forever. A third of them chose the option of disobedience and are now called fallen angels destined for damnation.

How about Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden? Their probation was in the Garden with a single tree. God gave them opportunity to make the decision to obey or reject his command. They chose to eat from the forbidden fruit and consequently were banished from the garden because of their bla-

Then there was Jesus during his temptation. Luke tells us that the Spirit led him into the wilderness for a time of testing. Three times Satan tempted him to compromise God's will for his life. Three times Jesus refused those temptations and victoriously returned from that experience in the power of the Spirit. He used his probationary time to prepare to be God's holy sacrificial Lamb on the cross for our redemption.

In the Revelation of Jesus Christ, the aged Apostle John speaks of a future moment when an angel announces to earth inhabitants that time or opportunity will be no more. What does that mean? Well, I believe it means that you and I have our earth life to choose what we will do with Jesus who is called Christ. This is our probationary gift from God. We will not always have this precious gift. It is a fleeting commodity. There will come a day when this door of salvation will close forever. God has given us this gift of time to receive his only begotten son as our personal savior. We have the moment to decide. The clock is ticking.

dren of his own, he loved kids, especially his many nieces and nephews. He was a loving uncle to them all. Tony enjoyed fishing; he was always ready to go to Chitna for dip netting. He loved the adventure of it all and always had some good stories to tell when he returned.

Tony had a bit of a competitive spirit and loved a good game of dominos or chess. Most of all he was just a good person. He always had a smile and hello for everyone. He knew no strangers. He offered his help to everyone willingly. He had a good heart and a wonderful spirit.

Tony left this world on September Those who knew him were greatly blessed. He will remain in our hearts forever. Tony was preceded in death by his father Peter Castel Sr., brothers Peter Castel Jr., Jimmy "Yo-Yo" Nunooruk, and Baby Randall Castel. He is survived by his mother and step-father Katherine and Gilmore Asitonia, sisters Barbara Dealke, LaDean Castel, Valerie Pendleton, Roberta Castel, Suzanne Castel, Rebecca Watkins, brothers George, Randall and Phillip Castel, nieces and nephews Shawna Castel, Robert Castel, Ashley Worley, Russell Worley, Bradley Pis-Bridget Montantes. grand-nephews Cameron Krause Spencer Lytle, Easton Childress, and many aunts, uncles and cousins too numerous to mention.

Faith Lorraine Fjeld

Faith Fjeld, former Duluth resident, died on October 18 in Moab, Utah. She was born on June 2, 1935 to Dr. Lawrence Field and Lorraine (Simeson) Field in Kalispell, MT. She spent most of her childhood in Montana where her father was a Western Norwegian Lutheran Church bishop. She graduated from Murray High School in St. Paul and St. Olaf College in 1957. After she married, she lived in Denver, San Francisco, Japan, England and the Netherlands and worked as an editor, an artist and a fashion model. In the early 1960s Faith was active in the civil rights movement and Another Mother for Peace.

She settled in on Fillmore Street in San Francisco in the late '70s where she spent her happiest days, developed her work as a fabric collage artist, raised her sons, enjoyed the jazz scene, and made banana bread that she sold at local bakeries to

Her graduate work was done at San Francisco State University on American Indian Symbolism. After becoming aware of her Sami heritage, she traveled to Sápmi (the Sami homelands in Norway, Sweden, Finland and the Kola Peninsula of Russia) and in 1991 became the founding editor of Báiki: the International Sami Journal. Through Báiki and her writing, lectures, classes and exhibits she became a leader of the North American Sami Reawakening connecting countless Sami descendants with each other and their heritage.

She lived in Alaska for five years researching the Alaskan Sami story and co-curated the exhibit The Sami Reindeer People of Alaska with Nathan Muus, which has traveled throughout the U.S., most recently at the Vesterheim Norwegian American Museum and the Minnesota Discovery Center in Chisholm. MN. She was a founding organizer and board member of the Sami Cultural Center of North America. She was long active in and passionate about indigenous and environmental issues. Her life was filled with family, friends and meaningful work Faith was preceded in death by her parents and infant sister. She is survived by her sons Bruno Kark of Emeryville, California; Clay Kark of Moab, Utah; granddaughters Ruby French-Kark and Olivia Kark; special cousins; and a multitude of friends and colleagues from around the world who remember her with love and gratitude.

An Alaska State Trooper flew to the village to inves Alaska State Inoper liew to the vinage to Investigate. The trooper did not find any immediate threat to the safety of the people in Elim. A suspect has been identified and charges are pending. The incident is still under investigation.

On October 29 while AST was in Flim investigating a report of shots fired, Adam Saccheus, 29, of Elim was arrested and charged with probation violation, resisting arrest, and fourth-degree assault on a police officer. Saccheus was intoxicated when the trooper contacted him at the village store. Saccheus was arrested a short time later after the trooper discovered that he was under conditions not to consume alcohol from a case with original charges of importing alcohol into Elim, a dry village. Saccheus was found hiding in a shed and assaulted the trooper during the arrest. The trooper sustained minor injuries. Saccheus's arrest is unrelated to the earlier report of

Arctic Waterways Safety Committee created

By Diana Haecker

After preliminary meetings in August, last week the Arctic Waterways Safety Committee was formed expressly to propagate best practices for all users of arctic waterways. The steering committee met on Oct. 28 in Juneau to go forward with its creation after an initial meeting took place.

As receding sea ice opens the Arctic and its waterways to increased human activity, oil and gas development and cargo shipping, Alaskan subsistence hunters saw the need to protect the maritime arctic and to ensure they would have a voice as development of the Arctic takes place.

With input from the U.S. Coast Guard, stakeholders from subsistence co-management groups, industry, and city and tribal governments unanimously agreed to create the Arctic Waterways Safety Committee. "The committee will be a selfgoverning multi-stakeholder group focused on creating best practices to ensure a safe, efficient and predictable operating environment for all users of the arctic waterways," according to press release announcing the AWSC creation. "We recognize the arctic waters are a shared resource and wanted a mechanism where all waterway users could participate in an open forum, allowing everyone to safely share the arctic waters in an equitable and sustainable manner," said Willie Goodwin, AWSC Chairman and Chair of the AWSC convening Steering Committee. "This committee will allow stakeholders to engage with each other directly to resolve safety challenges among themselves, and to better educate the inevitable flood of newcomers to Alaska's arctic waters. Additionally, when appropriate, the committee will seek the help of agencies such as the U.S. Coast Guard to promote best practices, without the need for regulatory ac-

The committee includes Arctic Northwest Borough Mayor Reggie Joule, City of Nome Mayor Denise Michels, North Slope Borough Mayor Charlotte Brower, as well as representatives from subsistence hunters, tribal governments, the oil and gas industry, tug and barge operators, maritime pilots and the Marine Exchange of Alaska. The group will promote and support long-term subsistence food security and the economic vitality of coastal communities.

"I endorse the efforts of the AWSC and their commitment to dramatically enhance maritime safety and stewardship in the arctic," said Rear Admiral Dan Abel, Commander, 17th Coast Guard District. "Many other ports and harbors throughout the United States use similar safety committees as an avenue to bring waterway users together into an open dialogue forum where the group collectively solves problems and improves waterway safety at the user level."

Several marine mammal co-management groups - the Alaska Nanuuq Commission, the Ice Seal Committee, the Eskimo Walrus Commission, the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission and the Alaska Beluga Whale Committee - formed the Arctic Marine Mammal Coalition, chaired by Willie Goodwin of Kotzebue. The coalition voiced concerns about maintaining the health of the marine mammal habitat and environment in the face of increased shipping traffic. AMMC's purpose is "to facilitate communication and education between arctic coastal communities and the USCG, NOAA, and other regulatory agencies on issues related to the expected impacts of increased ship traffic in the Arctic on our way of life and subsistence activities.

The U.S. Coast Guard encouraged the group to form a waterways committee as is done in other parts of the country. An initial meeting hosted by the Coast Guard took place at the end of August, when a steering committee was formed to discuss further steps to action. Last week, the steering committee took action and created the AWSC. The AWSC is now in the process of being incorporated as a 501(c) 3 non-profit organization.

The committee voted Willie Goodwin to serve as chairman and appointed Jenny Evans to serve as administrator. Evans said the committee will vote on a board of directors and draft bylaws in a future meeting. The committee has sent a letter to Governor Sean Parnell requesting funding for its work.

Jack Omelak, speaking on behalf of Chairman Willie Goodwin, said that the committee was formed with representatives from marine mammal subsistence user groups, development and industry, and local government and Native entities. "Exofficio representatives from the tour industry, regional Native corporations, and agencies such as the USGS will likely participate as observers providing advisement to the committee," Omelak wrote in an email to the Nome Nugget. Omelak wrote that each of the three categories will have equal formal representation on the committee. "The agenda for the next meeting is only in the early stages of development but will likely focus on the continued development of the structure of the body, formalizing partnerships and funding opportunities," he wrote.

In the meantime, each of the three groups will determine who to select for membership. The subsistence users will develop a preliminary list of concerns and issues to begin identifying significant points of discussion between all user groups.

ent hole to the northwest of the existing well field, where data indicates the upflow zone is located," an email accompanying the report release stated. "We understand that Potelco and Pilgrim Geothermal Limited, the potential developers of the site for large-scale generation, are reviewing their options for completing this hole over the winter."

Last year, the City of Nome contributed $300,000 to help finance the drilling effort. Several parties were involved in the quest to find the potential to develop a geothermal energy source. With Department of Energy monies and matching funds from the Alaska Energy Authority, the Alaska Center for Energy and Power at University of Alaska at Fairbanks has conducted studies in the past. Pilgrim Hot Springs is owned by Unatuuq LLC, a consortium of Native corporations includ-Straits Native Bering Corporation, Sitnasuak Native Corporation, Kawerak, Inc., Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation, White Mountain Native Corporation, Teller Native Corporation and Mary's Igloo Native Corporation.

The City's energy consultant, Ethan Berkowitz, connected Unatuuq LLC with an energy development company named Potelco Inc., owned by Quanta Services, a firm that offers specialized contracting services for the electric power, natural gas and pipeline industries. Potelco Inc. formed a company called Pilgrim Geothermal LLC in May 2013 to develop Pilgrim Hot Springs on its dime and to eventually sell the power to Nome Joint Utilities.

Pilgrim Geothermal LLC's manager Howard Trott could not be reached in time for comment on this story.

In reaction to the recent ACEP report, NJUS manager John Handeland said Potelco may have other options to develop the source. "We have not had the opportunity to meet with Pilgrim Hot Springs Limited after this summer's and fall activities," Handeland said. "The window of time under which the utility would maintain its commitment to purchase power is closing."

The commercial operation deadline is December 31, 2016, the date the facility must have achieved commercial operation and deliver power to Nome. Drilling done to date has shown mixed results, so further development activities will be necessary this winter to come to a go-no go decision. Handeland commented that. at minimum, the development done so far does appear to have confirmed a resource that could support development in the local Pilgrim area. But, the big question still remains - is it sufficient to provide power to Nome on a sustained and economically feasible basis.

If it turns out that there is enough sustainable power, NJUS has agreed to pay 22 cents per kwh, plus an additional "resource" payment averaging 4 cents to the resource owner, minus 1 cent for using the NJUS power lines from Rock Creek to Nome. On average, NJUS would pay 25 cents per kwh.

According to a KNOM report, ACEP director Gwen Holdmann said the new data gathered this fall points to the hot springs' origin, just slightly northwest of the existing soak pond.

However, due to funding limitations, it's up to the developers to further explore the resource.

Division of Elections has yet to count 48,000 ballots

By Diana Haecker

While some results from last week's general elections seem to be solid, according to unofficial results, the outcomes in the races for U.S. Senator and Alaska Governor are still unknown.

Division of Elections director Gail Fenumiai told the Nome Nugget that since Nov. 5, no ballots have been mence again on Nov. 12 through Nov. 14 and from Nov. 17 through Nov. 19.

There are still 48,000 ballots to be counted, Fenumiai said.

The count will then go to the State Review Board which will review the results and certify the election results by Nov. 28.

According to unofficial results posted on November 5 at the Alaska Division of Elections website, incumbent U.S. Senator Mark Begich, a Democrat, received 45.13 percent of counted votes. Challenger Republican Dan Sullivan garnered 48.74 percent of the vote.

In the Bering Strait region, the majority of voters from Nome and all

15 surrounding communities cast their ballots for Mark Begich. Alaskans for Begich Campaign Manager Susanne Fleek-Green said in a statement: "Inspired by stories of village elders being lifted onto four wheelers to go vote and Alaskans traveling up and down river to cast their ballots, Alaskans for Begich is anxious for a final count of all of Alaskans' ballots and respects the procedures, process and timetable of the Alaska Division of Elections"

In the race for U.S. Representative, Democrat Forrest Dunbar garnered 40.39 percent of the votes but incumbent Republican Don Young won the race with 51.69 percent. Dunbar conceded the race on Nov. 5. "I would like to congratulate Don on being reelected as Alaska's Congressman in the U.S. House or Representatives," said Dunbar. "He closed out the campaign well, and did a good job in his final two debates. I hope that the Don Young of the past two weeks or so is the Don Young Alaska will have representing us in the U.S. House for the next two

Man injured in stabbing by girlfriend

By Sandra L. Medearis

An argument about a pet ended with a woman in jail and a man flown out of town on a medevac flight for treatment.

Court documents charge Karen Tate-Gurno, 47, with stabbing boyfriend Thomas Koyuk with a five-inch blade Wednesday evening, Nov. 5.

On Monday, Tate-Gurno stayed at Anvil Mountain Correctional Center pending $20,000 bail following a court appearance on Assault in the First Degree: recklessly causes physical injury to another by means of a dangerous instrument.

The offense is a Class A felony.
According to a statement on

According to a statement on record from Alaska State Trooper J. Stroebele, police received a 911 call from Koyuk, 61, at around 6:30 p.m. He reported his girlfriend, Tate-

Gurno, had stabbed him with a knife. Koyuk reported that he was bleeding from his back.

Police responded to the residence that is near Ft. Davis, close to the Radio KNOM tower.

Koyuk was seen walking from the residence, hunched over with blood on his clothing, according to the court document.

Nome Police Dept. officers could see blood bubbling from a puncture wound on his back. Koyuk said he got into an argument with Tate-Gurno over a pet dog.

An ambulance took Koyuk to the hospital.

NPD officers contacted Tate-Gurno at the residence. She said there was no knife, according to charging documents. A knife was found on the floor of the residence. The knife had a wooden handle with a blade about five in. long that was bent. There was some blood on the knife blade. NPD arrested Tate-Gurno

Police say alcohol was involved, that both parties were intoxicated. NPD took a PBT test that showed Tate-Gurno at .205, according to the court record. Koyuk said no one else was at the residence, that the couple had been together for six years.

Tate-Gurno appeared in court Nov. 7 where conditions of release were set, including the $20,000 bail.

Tate-Gurno did not plead not guilty or guilty to the charge.

asking the state to make going on and off the new Snake River Bridge more safe for motorists traveling from several directions at the end of the span meeting Seppala Drive. Nome Planning Commission backs the modifications.

The bridge takes traffic in and out of the port area through an intersection that is a cluster of mismatched road junctions.

Additionally, truck drivers hauling long rigs with 25-foot tractors and 40-foot long trailers are fighting an insufficient turning radius at the end of the bridge. That causes them encroach into the oncoming lane and oncoming traffic.

They must maneuver to not hit the railing.

The Council and NPC want to boost road modifications to high priority with state Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities.

The Council, at its regular meeting Nov. 10, passed a resolution advocating the DOT&PF to undertake the following priorities:

•Realign Center Creek Road to meet Jafet Road at Seppala Drive. Jafet Road begins at the Seppala end of the bridge and leads down to Port Road, which is leading to the causeway and barge ramps where cargo

Chief's Notes

By John Papasodora, Nome Police Chief WINTER SAFETY

I glance out the window and see that winter is here. Unfortunately, the freeze-thaw cycle will continue throughout the winter months, which will create hazardous walking and driving conditions. Please be careful when walking or driving, as intersections/road/sidewalks will be slippery. Both falls and motor vehicle collisions are a source of many injuries each year. In combination with darkness and reduced visibility, the safety factors are many. Slow down and come to a complete stop at intersections; watch out for pedestrians; make sure your vehicle (brakes, lights, tires) are in good working order and if walking- wear reflective clothing to make yourself (or your children visible).

Also remember as your snowmachines come out of hibernation, that the rules of the road and traffic laws do apply to snowmachines. Use caution, drive slowly until you are in the country or open area, and be considerate of neighbors. Loud exhaust, acceleration and reckless operation will attract attention. The same rules apply for snowmachine operators. Slow down and drive safely. We want all persons to be safe in our community.

PROPOSITION 2: MARIJUANA

During the last election, the voters approved proposition 2 – which allows for the commercial sale and taxation of marijuana. It allows for a person to possess up to one ounce of marijuana; to grow up to six plants with three being 'mature' plants; and for the transfer (gifting) of marijuana between persons. These changes will take effect 90 days following certification of the election, or sometime in February 2015.

However, proposition two does not 'legalize' marijuana.

Under the initiative, the City of Nome can enact ordinances restricting the commercial sale of marijuana; and control the methods for the implementation of the initiative. In addition, the State of Alaska is charged with development and implementation of the regulations for the licensing of businesses; sales; and taxation of marijuana. The timelines for this to occur are sometime within nine months of the

The Check is in the Mail

We sure got a lot of "vote for..." fliers in the mail—on Wednesday, just in time for Tuesday's election. It seems we live on the far side of the moon as far as the U.S Postal Service is concerned. Heck, we haven't even received catalogs for the last month and only a few first class mail deliveries. It seems Nome's mail accumulates in a broom closet in Anchorage or Seattle until someone stumbles over it and puts it on a northbound plane. Credit card and insurance companies are not very forgiving if we don't get their invoices in time to pay the bill before the due date. Time magazine is not very timely.

If we want to mail a letter we can't buy stamps at the Post office in Nome because they ran out of stamps. However, one can purchase stamps on-line and they will be mailed to us. Sure, we won't hold our breath. In an attempt to generate efficiency all Nome outgoing mail is sent to Anchorage to be sorted. So, to mail a letter to a business across the street the letter goes from downtown Nome to the post Office Annex in Nome, flown to Anchorage, sorted and flown back to Nome. Wouldn't it be more efficient to hire some help and sort the Nome mail in Nome?

The U.S. Postal Service is vital to our local economy and impacts how we do business through catalogs, by-pass mail, and money transactions. The Post Office is how our government touches each and every one of us, so let's keep it adequately funded and functional. Yes, the check is still in the mail. Let's get it delivered.

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change calls for action to curb emissions

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change issued last week a stark warning that uncurbed continued CO<sub>2</sub> emissions would threaten the global society with food shortages, refugee crises, flooding of coastal communities and entire island nations and mass extinction of plants and animals.

The panel made public a synthesis report and distributed the report to policymakers worldwide.

One of the main messages in the report states that "human influence on the climate system is clear, and recent anthropogenic emissions of greenhouse gases are the highest in

As for the future, the report says: 'Continued emissions of greenhouse gases will cause further warming and long-lasting changes in all components of the climate system, increasing the likelihood of severe, pervasive and irreversible impacts for people and ecosystems." The panel suggested substantial and sustained reductions in greenhouse gas emissions, combined with adaptation plans, to limit climate change risks. The IPCC said that adaptation and mitigation options can help address climate change, but no single option will be enough to address the whole problem. "Effective implementation depends on policies and cooperation at all scales," the panel wrote.

Fukushima radioactivity detected off California coast

Monitoring efforts along the Pacific Coast of the U.S. and Canada have detected the presence of small amounts of radioactivity from the 2011 Fukushima Dai-ichi Nuclear Power Plant accident 100 miles due west of Eureka, California. Scientists at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution found the trace amounts of telltale radioactive compounds as part of their ongoing monitoring of natural and human sources of radioactivity in the ocean.

In the aftermath of the 2011 tsunami off Japan, the Fukushima Dai-ichi Nuclear Power Plant released cesium-134 and other radioactive elements into the ocean at unprecedented levels. Since then, the radioactive plume has traveled west across the Pacific, propelled largely by ocean currents and being diluted along the way.

"We detected cesium-134, a contaminant from Fukushima, off the northern California coast. The levels are only detectable by sophisticated equipment able to discern minute quantities of radioactivity," said Ken Buesseler, a WHOI marine chemist, who is leading the monitoring effort. "Most people don't realize that there was already cesium in Pacific waters prior to Fukushima, but only the cesium-137 isotope. Cesium-137 undergoes radioactive decay with a 30-year half-life and was introduced to the environment during atmospheric weapons testing in the 1950s and '60s. Along with cesium-137, we detected cesium-134 which also does not occur naturally in the environment and has a half-life of just two years. Therefore the only source of this cesium-134 in the Pacific today is from Fukushima."

The amount of cesium-134 reported in these new offshore data is less than 2 Becquerels per cubic meter. This Fukushima-derived cesium is far below where one might expect any measurable risk to human health or marine life, according to international health agencies. It is more than 1,000 times lower than acceptable limits in drinking water set by US EPA.

Scientists have used models to predict when and how much cesium-134 from Fukushima would appear off shore of Alaska and the coast of Canada. "We don't know exactly when the Fukushima isotopes will be detectable closer to shore because the mixing of offshore surface waters and coastal waters is hard to predict. Mixing is hindered by coastal currents and near-shore upwelling of colder deep water," said Buesseler. "We stand to learn more from samples taken this winter when there is generally less upwelling, and exchange between coastal and offshore waters maybe enhanced."

Because no U.S. federal agency is currently funding monitoring of ocean radioactivity in coastal waters, Buesseler launched a crowd-funded, citizen-science program to engage the public in gathering samples and to provide up-to-date scientific data on the levels of cesium isotopes along the west coast of North America and Hawaii.

The offshore radioactivity reported last week came from water samples collected and sent to Buesseler's lab for analysis in August by a group of volunteers on the research vessel Point Sur sailing between Dutch Harbor, Alaska, and Eureka, California.

Buesseler believes the spread of radioactivity across the Pacific is an evolving situation that demands careful, consistent monitoring of the sort conducted from the Point Sur.

"Crowd-sourced funding continues to be an important way to engage the public and reveal what is going on near the coast. But ocean scientists need to do more work offshore to understand how ocean currents will be transporting cesium on shore. The models predict cesium levels to increase over the next two to three years, but do a poor job describing how much more dilution will take place and where those waters will reach the shore line first," said Buesseler. "So we need both citizen scientists to keep up the coastal monitoring network, but also research vessels and comprehensive studies offshore like this one, that are too expensive for the average citizen to support," said Buesseler.

A sample taken from offshore Gambell in April showed no cesium 134, but it did show legacy levels of cesium 137.

A crowd sourcing website accepts donations to fund another sampling from the Bering Strait region. Only $300 are needed to fund another sampling of waters from the Bering Strait/Norton Sound region. For more information visit

Archaeologists discover remains of Ice Age infants in Alaska

The remains of two Ice Age infants, buried more than 11,000 years ago at a site in Alaska, represent the youngest human remains ever found in northern North America, according to a new paper published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

The site and its artifacts provide new insights into funeral practices and other rarely preserved aspects of life among people who inhabited the area thousands of years ago, according to Ben Potter, a researcher at the University of Alaska Fairbanks and the paper's lead author.

Potter led the archaeological team that made the discovery in fall of 2013 at an excavation of the Upward Sun River site, near the Tanana River. The researchers worked closely with local and regional Native tribal organizations as they conducted their research. The National Science Foundation funded the

Potter and his colleagues note that the human remains and associated burial offerings, as well as inferences about the time of year the children died and were buried, could lead to new thinking about how early societies were structured, the stresses they faced as they tried to survive, years: polite, on-point, prepared, even friendly. It's been a hard-fought and intense campaign for all Alaskans, and I think those of us who can are happy to have a moment to take a deep breath and reflect a lit-

At Election Central on Tuesday night, Dunbar was asked repeatedly if he would run for the Congressional seat again in 2016. While he has not ruled it out, he will not make an announcement in the remainder of 2014. In Nome, Young received 476 votes, Dunbar, 397. In District 39, the majority of voters cast ballots for Don Young.

Who will be the next Governor? That tight race is still ongoing as Independent challenger Bill Walker and his running mate Byron Mallott have a tiny lead of 1.4 percent over incumbent Governor Sean Parnell and his running mate Dan Sullivan, currently Mayor of Anchorage. The Unity ticket of Walker/Mallott has 47.83 percent of the vote, Parnell/Sullivan 46.42 percent. In Nome, 576 voters cast votes for Walker/Mallott; 307 voters voted for Parnell/Sullivan. With the exception of Brevig Mission (48 for Parnell; 46  $\,$ for Walker) and Stebbins (59 for Parnell; 48 for Walker), the majority of voters in the surrounding communities voted for Walker/Mallott.

On election night, Bill Walker encouraged supporters to wait patiently for the final results. Speaking to a crowd at Alaska Election Central in the Egan Center in downtown Anchorage, Walker informed supporters that the race is too close to call at this point. "Another Alaska election has come down to the wire," Walker said. "We'll just have to wait and see what effect absentee and questioned ballots will have on the totals." Byron Mallott, originally scheduled to appear with Walker at Election Central, was grounded in Juneau after his plane was struck by lightning prior to take off. Mallott and his family were able to fly into Anchorage on a later flight but not before operations at Election Central closed for the night.

The ballot also asked whether or not to retain Paul Roetman as Superior Court Judge in the Second Judicial District. Out of a total of 6,245 votes, 71.55 percent voted 'yes', and 28.45 percent voted 'no'.

All three ballot measures passed. In Nome, 525 voters cast a 'yes' vote for Ballot Measure 2, legalizing the sale, distribution and use of marijuana; 406 voters were against the measure. In the region, all communities except for Shaktoolik (Yes: 42; No: 47) and Unalakleet (Yes: 125; No: 141) were for the measure.

Ballot Measure 3, to raise the minimum wage, gained the support of a majority of voters in House District 39, including both Nome Ballot Measure 4, to protect Bristol Bay and to have the Legislature approve any large mining projects, also won the majority of votes from Nome and surrounding communities.

In House District 39, Representative Neal Foster handily won 97.92 percent or 4,748 votes. In Senate District T, Senator Donnie Olson won with 97.89 percent, or 8,302

Last week, the newly elected legislators convened to organize the upcoming 29th Alaska Legislature.

Berta Gardner (D-Anchorage) will serve as Minority Leader, replacing Hollis French. Senator Donny Olson was assigned to the Finance committee and the Community and Regional Affairs committee. Kevin Meyer (R-Anchorage), a 14year legislative veteran, will replace Sen. Charlie Huggins of Wasilla as Senate President. Sen. John Coghill of Fairbanks will continue as majority leader and Huggins took the chairmanship of the Rules Commit-

In the House, Mike Chenault (R-Nikiski) was re-elected House Speaker. Charisse Millett (R-Anchorage) is Majority Leader; Rules Chair - Craig Johnson (R-Anchorage); Finance Co-Chair (Operating Budget) - Mark Neuman (R-Su-Valley); Finance Co-Chair (Capital Budget)- Steve Thompson, (R-Fairbanks); Majority Whip – Bob Herron (D-Bethel).

House Standing Committee chairs are: Resources - Ben Nageak (D-Barrow) & Dave Talerico (R-Interior Alaska)

Joint Committee chairs are: Legislative Budget & Audit - Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage, Chair (House control); Legislative Council – Bob Herron, Vice-Chair (Senate control); Select Committee on Ethics - Millett; Armed Services - Reinbold, Co-Chair; Administrative Regulation Review - Jim Colver, Vice-Chair (Senate Control)

Rep. Chris Tuck (D-Anchorage), will serve as Democratic Minority Leader and Rep. Max Gruenberg (D-Anchorage) will remain as the House Democratic Minority Whip. The Democrats gained an 11th seat in the House after Rep. Pete Higgins (R-Fairbanks) lost his seat to Democrat

In reaction to voter approval of Ballot Measure 2, Rep Bob Lynn (R-Anchorage) announced his intention to introduce legislation to provide safeguards and restrictions on the sale of marijuana.

"It looks like Alaskans have spoken, and now it's time for us in the Legislature to be careful stewards in terms of how the law is implemented and shaped, and the regulations are written," said Lynn. Lynn plans to file a bill containing three key points not specified in the initiative: restricting marijuana establishments from being within 500 feet of any school property (public, private or religious,) and any recreation or youth center, church or a public park; limiting certain advertising for the selling of marijuana; and, barring individuals convicted of a felony to own or work at a marijuana estab-

In its last meeting, councilmembers encouraged Handeland to ask DOT for reimbursement for the work.

During the summer, truckers found that the old and new Snake River bridges had different turning radius advantages and used one to enter the port area and the other bridge to leave the port area. However, DOT's removal of the old Snake River Bridge at the end of summer removed that flexibility.

Fire destroys house in White Mountain

By Diana Haecker

On Tuesday, Nov. 4, a fire destroyed a home in White Mountain, but left the sole occupant Jack Titus, 64, unharmed. According to Alaska State Trooper Sgt. Charlie Cross, Titus managed to escape the flames from a primus stove after feeling the heat from it behind him.

White Mountain Volunteer Fire department Chief Jack Adams was called out around 7:15 p.m.

Adams saw flames coming out of the home's windows, reaching to the roof. About 20 fire fighters and residents with experience fighting fires responded to the scene. The fire fighters used a nearby fire hydrant but also ran an extra hose to the Fish River. They chopped a hole in the ice and used a large pump to draw water from the river to help fight the house in flames.

Adams said it took several hours to completely extinguish the fire He said hotspots in the building kept flaring up, keeping fire fighters on their toes for most of the night. "After the fire was out, we kept an eye on it until 5 a.m.," said Adams. The 24-by-30-ft house was totally destroyed in the fire.

Titus lost all his belongings in the fire. He is now living with his brother Ed Titus in White Mountain but he's also looking for other living arrangements. Ed Titus said in a phone interview with the Nome Nugget that his brother needs pots and pans, bed linens, towels and some bedding.

Titus said donations of those items are welcome and can be sent via Bering Air or Ravn to White Mountain. Ravn Air requested that those wanting to ship items establish a contact person in Nome and for that single contact to get in touch with station manager Sonja Vickers at 443-7595 to coordinate the transport of donated items.

NO MAINTENANCE— Signs at the Nome-Teller Bob Blodgett highway advise motorists that they travel at their own risk beyond the Snake River bridge.

DOT: No road maintenance beyond signs

By Diana Haecker

It's that time of the year again when all three state highways leading out of Nome will no longer be maintained beyond the signs installed by the local Dept. of Transportation crew last week.

The DOT does not maintain the Nome Council Highway beyond Farley's Camp, the Bob Blodgett Nome-Teller Highway beyond the Snake River Bridge and the Kougarok Road beyond Banner Creek

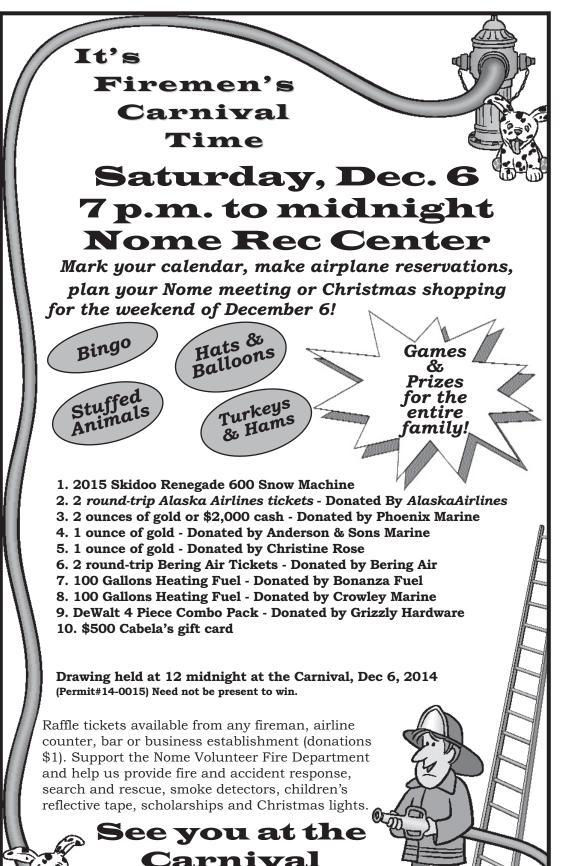

DOT Maintenance and Operations Superintendent Evan Booth advises that no plowing or other road maintenance will be done and that motorists travel at their own risk.

Last winter, a lack of snowfall allowed unusual frequent traveling on the road with cars and trucks, but several people had to be rescued when their trucks got stuck in snowdrifts, or went off road due to dangerously icy and glaciated conditions.

New tools will improve storm surge forecasts for western Alaska communities

By Laurie McNicholas

Western Alaska residents are well aware of the flooding, erosion and major infrastructure damage inflicted in recent years on low-lying communities by more frequent severe coastal storms. Norton Sound is especially prone to storm surge impacts. The region has received four state and federal disaster declarations in the past 10 years due to damage from major storms.

Aimee Fish, Alaska region director for the National Weather Service reports that a new model will give forecasters storm tide data for every Western Alaska community and that storm surge and flood maps are being developed for use within each community. Fish described the projects at a conference on "Climate, Conservation and Community in Alaska and Northwest Canada" last week in An-

Fish said the impacts of coastal storms on western Alaska come from delayed sea ice formation due to climate change, permafrost melt that causes bluff failure and Bering Sea storms with a greater potential for waves and surge. Tides are a huge component of storm surge and water level, she added.

"In addition to tides, you have the surge which is driven by atmospheric forcing," Fish noted. "Tide and the atmospheric forcing together combine a storm tide. So the actual tide makes a very large impact on that, depending on how large a tide is in a particular area. If your storm surge occurs in a maximum tide, that will certainly have a different impact than if it were to occur at a minimum Model fills data gaps tide."

Fish said the NWS can't measure tide in real time in many Alaska locations. "It is too expensive to set up National Ocean Survey real time observation sites for every community in western Alaska," she explained. "In addition, we have few NOS tide prediction sites relative to the enormity of this coastline, and we know the tide varies tremendously from point to point. It's a very diverse coastline.

Tide forecast aided Golovin

Fish said the NWS was able to provide Golovin with a storm tide forecast on the night of Nov. 9, 2013. "Their storm surge forecast was approximately 11.5 feet above mean sea level—that's the storm tide forecast," she said. "We could only tell them that the forecast for the 2013 storm or the peak of the series of storms was approximately a foot greater than what we forecast in November of 2011, which was another big year of a storm that impacted this community. We did not have a true measurement of how high the water got, but we could at least give them that information, which allowed them to make some really fantastic decisions and mitigating efforts in their community. They borrowed some sand, built a berm along the road, and that frankly saved a good portion of their community and their critical infrastructure from being inundated. That's Alaskan ingenuity really at its best."

The Western Alaska Landscape Conservation Cooperative has provided the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration with funds to develop a model the NWS can use to obtain tide amplitude and phase data for all western Alaska communities, Fish said. The Western Alaska LCC initiated funding in 2012 for a multiyear project to develop a high resolution model coupling the effects of sea ice, tide, wind-driven wave dynamics and currents in the formation of storm surges in western Alaska

"This project quantifies the effect of reduced nearshore ice coverage on coastal flooding," states the Western Alaska LCC website. "The project is developing a large domain wave and storm surge model...with high resolution along the Western Alaska coast. This approach captures the complex multi-scale and interactive physics of the deep water, shelf, nearshore, coast, estuaries, and rivers, and is more robust operationally. The model is being assessed using historical wind/pressure fields and station observation data. The impacts of receding ice cover will be studied by including historical seasonal ice coverage, and its effects on the atmospheric and hydrodynamic processes." Fish said the modeling project has been expanded to include all of Alaska.

Local storm surge maps

Tide data produced by the new model can be incorporated into another model to produce a graph showing forecasters where a storm surge could be in a community, but it won't show where floodwaters could go, Fish noted. She said geologist Nicole Kinman with the Alaska Division of Geological and Geophysical Surveys is using community profile maps from the Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development to make storm surge maps for individual Alaska commu-

"What (Kinman) and her GGS team have done is taken that map, overlaid the best available bathymetry, color-coded sections of elevation, and now we can have a map that a forecaster in a community can use with a key to bridge the gap between what the graph was showing and where the water could potentially go," Fish said. Currently, maps are being developed for only five locations and data gaps need to be filled before storm surge and flood maps are prepared for every community, she added.

The NOAA storm surge model is among several scientific studies funded by the Western Alaska LCC since 2012 relative to change in coastal storms and their impacts. The studies target key uncertainties and science priorities identified by managers and scientists for western

Climate change planning

A nationwide system of 22 Landscape Conservation Cooperatives mandated by order of the Secretary of Interior on Feb. 22, 2010 includes five LLCs in Alaska. "Because of the unprecedented scope of affected landscapes, Interior bureaus and agencies must work together, and with other federal, state, tribal and local governments and private landowner partners, to develop landscape-level strategies for understanding and responding to climate change impacts," the order states. The order directs LLCs to work interactively with Interior's regional Climate Science Centers.

The U.S. Geological Survey is developing eight regional Climate Science Centers to provide climate change data and analysis geared to the needs of fish and wildlife managers for climate change adaptation strategies in close collaboration with Interior agencies and other federal, state, university and non-governmental partners, notes the Secretarial Order. The Alaska Climate Science Center (CSC) opened Feb. 25, 2011 at the University of Alaska Anchor-

A joint Alaska CSC and LCC conference was held Nov. 3-6 in An-Sponsored by the chorage. University of Alaska Fairbanks, the conference was open to stakeholders, decision makers and researchers from throughout the LCC and CSC communities. Individual LCC steering committees met Nov. 3, and a joint steering committee meeting was held Nov. 6.

The conference included more than 60 presentations on Nov. 4-5, many of which described current scientific studies relative to climate change in Alaska and Northwest Canada.

how they treated the youngest members of their society, and how they viewed death and the importance of rituals associated with it.

Potter made the new find on the site of a 2010 excavation, where the cremated remains of another 3-yearold child were found. The bones of the two infants were found in a pit directly below a residential hearth where the 2010 remains were found.

Taken collectively, these burials and cremation reflect complex behaviors related to death among the early inhabitants of North America," Potter said.

In the paper, Potter and his colleagues describe unearthing the remains of the two children in a burial pit under a residential structure about 15 inches below the level of the 2010 find. The radiocarbon dates of the newly discovered remains are identical to those of the previous find about 11,500 years ago-indicating a short period of time between the burial and cremation, perhaps a sin-

Also found within the burials were unprecedented grave offerings. They included shaped stone points and associated antler foreshafts decorated with abstract incised lines, representing some of the oldest examples of hafted compound weapons in North America.

"The presence of hafted points may reflect the importance of hunting implements in the burial ceremony and with the population as whole," the paper notes.

The researchers also examined dental and skeletal remains to determine the probable age and sex of the infants at the time of the death: One survived birth by a few weeks, while the other died in utero. The presence of three deaths within a single highly mobile foraging group may indicate resource stress, such as food shortages, among these early Americans.

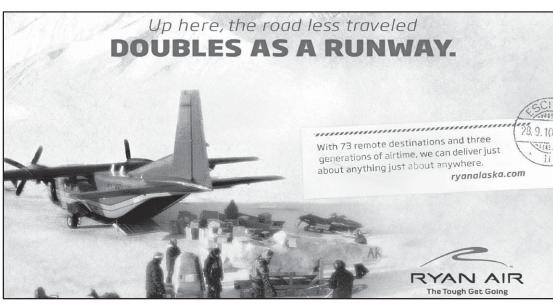

The artifacts—including the projectile points and plant and animal remains—may help to build a more complete picture of early human societies and how they were structured, as well as how they survived climate changes at the end of the last great Ice Age. The presence of two burial events-the buried infants and cremated child-within the same dwelling could also indicate relatively longer-term residential occupation of the site than previously ex-

The remains of salmon-like fish and ground squirrels in the burial pit indicate that the site was likely occupied by hunter-gatherers between June and August.

"The deaths occurred during the summer, a time period when regional resource abundance and diversity was high and nutritional stress should be low, suggesting higher levels of mortality than may be exour give understanding of survival strategies of the period," the authors write.

BSSD hosts Wrestling/Cheerleading Tourney

By Jeffrey Erickson

Typhoon Nuri had nothing on the storm that hit the Unalakleet School gymnasium this past weekend. Almost 300 elementary and junior high wrestlers and cheerleaders came together for the 33rd Annual Bering School District Wrestling/Cheerleading Tournament. It has been a highlight of the sports calendar due to its incredible energy, outstanding athletic performances and friendly competition.

The first night (Thursday) is a time to get the butterflies out and gauge the field as seed bouts are on the menu. These matches are shorter and the fact that there are four of them going at the same time makes it a blur of activity. By the end of the night, brackets are set and all know where they stand and who they'll face for the duration of the tourna-

Friday morning, the gym was abuzz as all contestants felt the grip of expectations, hopes and dreams. The young athletes had all watched classes ahead of them on the same mat fend for individual and team titles, watched dreams realized and hopes crushed. On this morning, all had the same goal....one of glory.

Dominant wrestlers come through the tournament annually and it didn't take long to see that there were several standouts in this 2014 version. Kaden Jackson (Koyuk), Dean Paniptchuk (Shaktoolik), Alvin Washington (St. Michael), Micah Foster (Teller), Tony Haugen (Unalakleet) and Gabe Stenek (Shishmaref) immediately stood out with their dominance. Many others displayed performances that showed there would be strong challenges facing returning champions.

Wrestling matches are microcosms of life where perseverance in the face of adversity, persistence and a strong will most often provide good results. Each match offers a chance for redemption, dominance or survival. Whether a quick pin or a grueling three period struggle, each match has a life of its own. The audience was treated to so many entertaining moments. One classic match was between Wales' Daniel Milligrock and Savoonga's Trisha Waghiyi. Neither were serious contenders in their weight class but highlighted the joy and satisfaction of friendly competition. Their determined smiles showed through their efforts.

In the cheerleading portion of the tournament, the power and grace of the region's cheer squads never eased to amaze. From the tiniest 4th grader to the more mature 8th grade cheerleaders, the smiles never stopped. Voices filled the gymnasium as each urged on their wrestlers. Each team sent individuals out to compete for stunt titles and all teams showed their hard work in group dance performances. From soaring pyramids to flips and splits, the long hours of preparation paid off to the delight of the crowds.

Another storyline that ran through the wrestling tournament was the dominant performances of the Stebbins lady wrestlers. Match after match, the girls pounded their male counterparts with speed and power, showing no fear or useless delicacy. Their determined stares caused many a young man to avert their eyes in deference.

By Saturday night, the cloudy picture was beginning to clear and champions emerge. Exceptional performances abounded. Upsets like Riley Washington (Stebbins) and Randy Bruns (Brevig Mission) came back from the loser's bracket to unseat defending champions drove the crowd into a frenzy. At the end there were a couple hundred tired smiles. All were champions in someone's heart and mind.

Lady Nanooks will play at State volleyball tournament

By Sarah Miller

Even though they were not able to capture the Western Conference championship title for a third time, Nome girls volleyball team will play at the state tournament in Anchorage next weekend.

The WC championship went to the Barrow Whalers, whose team entered the tournament seeded third. In a series of games described as "nailbiting" by Whalers coach Seei Pili, Barrow defeated Nome and Bethel to win the title. Barrow faced the Lady Nanooks in the opening game on Friday afternoon in a gymnasium packed with rowdy home team fans. The first set ended with a key block by the Nanooks which led to a final score of 25-19 in Nome's favor. In the second set, Barrow proved that there would be no easy games in the tournament; they tied the match at 24-26. The third set put Nome on top, 25-21, thanks to some key blocking by senior Jane Tidwell. In the end, however, the win went to the Whalers, who left the Nanooks no room for errors. A key kill shot by Milya Wright of Barrow put the score at 13-15.

The Lady Nanooks took the loss hard, their record as conference champions having been broken. "That was a tough loss," said Coach Lucas Frost. "Barrow has improved a lot since last year. They were the dominant team this year." "We came to play," said Barrow coach Pili. "The game against Nome was the game that we needed to win, and we did it. This is a brand new team, with a strong group of young freshmen and sophomores. They are still learning, but they are very athletic and all we had to really do was teach them how to play the game. They peaked at the right time."

Next up in the tournament were the Kotzebue and Bethel teams. Despite the disadvantage of having lost five seniors and playing with a very young team, the Bethel girls defeated Kotzebue in three games, earning the honor of playing against Barrow in the championship match. Barrow won a fast first set, 10-25. The second set saw a higher level of play demonstrated by both teams, resulting in a closer score of 18-25, again in Barrow's favor. However, Bethel returned in the third set to defeat the Whalers 25-13. Barrow prevailed in the final set when an out of bounds hit by Bethel put the score at 18-25. Coach Margo Livermore commented, "It didn't go our way, but I'm very pleased and proud of this team. If you had seen them at our first match, you wouldn't have thought this was the same team. They've worked so hard and come a really long way."

After Nome defeated Kotzebue in three sets in the tournament's Saturday morning game, the final match was between the Lady Nanooks and Bethel on Saturday afternoon. At times, both teams struggled to find their rhythm. Nome lost the first set to Bethel, 22-25; they were outserved, out-sized, out-passed, and out-blocked by the Lady Warriors. However, strong serves and passes brought Nome back in the second set to defeat Bethel 25-21. Strong serves by sophomore Jillian Stettenbenz and coordinated plays executed between Kim Clark, Allaryce Agloinga, Rene Merchant, and Alyssa Bushey gave Nome the advantage in the third and fourth sets, leading to final scores of 25-21 and 25-18. "It was a little ugly in the first set," commented Frost. "Our girls put a lot of pressure on Jillian, needing her to come through with her serves, but she rose to the occasion. They all came together." Frost credited Clark in particular for her performance in the match against Bethel. "She was by far the strongest player on the court. She definitely deserved to be on the all-tournament team."

The all-tournament team players were Ariana Salamat (Barrow), Rene Merchant (Nome), Danielle Lowrey (Bethel), Alyssa Bushey (Nome), and Milya Wright (Barrow). Bethel's team won the GPA Award. The Sportsmanship Award went to the Lady Nanooks.

The Lady Nanooks will play at the state tournament this week in Anchorage. Their first game is scheduled against Grace Christian, the defending state champions.

Nome's young wrestlers stand out at Bush Brawl

By Sarah Miller

At last weekend's Bush Brawl wrestling tournament in Kotzebue, Nome was primarily represented by its youngest wrestlers. Because several high school athletes were sidelined by illness, travel slots were opened for the entire middle school team as well as several elementary aged wrestlers. Of the varsity wrestlers in attendance, Orlin Golorgergen distinguished himself, placing third in the 126-pound weight class in a win over Barrow wrestler Michael Gandia. Three of Nome's high school wrestlers competed in the 145-pound weight class, placing among the top wrestlers among the field of 16 competitors: Tim James, John Tidwell, and Jason Gilder. Gilder placed second, defeated in the final bout by Gary Eakin of Kotzebue. James and Tidwell competed against one another in the bout for third and fourth place; James won by decision to capture third place, giving Tidwell fourth.

The middle school students finished strong in the finals. Five of Nome's wrestlers took championship titles. JJ Marble and Kenneth Hafner placed first and second, respectively, in the 85-pound class. In the 95pound class, first place went to Stephen Anderson and third to Dawson Evans. Jon Gilder placed first in the 100-pound class; Ĉaelin Olanna placed second in the 105-pound Among the 120 pound wrestlers, Sam Cross placed first, defeating teammate and second place finisher Shyloah Shannon in the final match. A similar occurrence among the 125-pound wrestlers pitted teammates Elden Cross and Owen Hebel against one another for the championship match, with the win going to Hebel. Nephi Tidwell placed third in the 145-pound class.

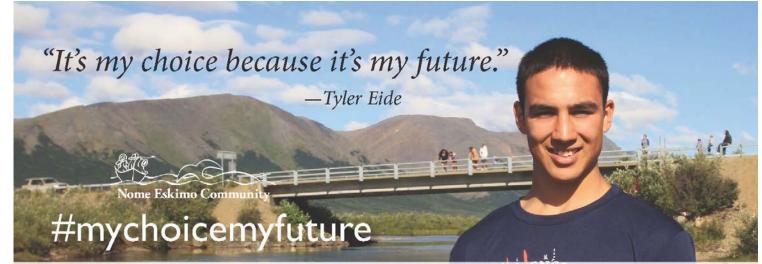

Nome's elementary team champions include Isiah Marble, placing first in the 50-pound class, Son Erikson in the 60-pound class, Ethan Hannon in the 65-pound class, Jon Tagle among the 90-pound wrestlers, and Justin Tagle in the 115-pound class. Tagle wrestled the championship match against teammate Bode Leeper, who was awarded second place. Nome's runners up included Katie Smith and Sadie Ellison, in the 90- and 105-pound classes. Gavin Dexter took third place in the 80-pound class with a win over Dalton Buffas. Karlin Ahwinona-Smith also captured third, in the 75-pound class. Other top finishers included Paris Hebel, fourth in the 70-pound class, and Hayden Leeper, also fourth, in the 60-pound class.

Nome's high school team took fifth place among the eleven teams competing, trailing Kotzebue, Homer, Barrow and Galena.

The team will spend the next two weeks recuperating from illness and preparing for the Lancer Smith tournament in Palmer on November 21-22.

- You can't smoke MJ and drive; or drive after smoking.
- · You can't smoke MJ in public (it will result in a fine and probably seizure of your marijuana as it will be evidence).
- You can't sell it between private parties. 'Black Market Sales' will continue to be illegal unless you have the proper licenses (which won't be available for quite some time)
- You can't grow more than the amount 'legal' under the initiative and not until the initiative is in effect (sometime in February). You will need a license to grow for commercial purposes.
- You can't have it at school or at certain other locations where it is prohibited (Federal properties). Possession on certain properties will remain a felony.
- You can't possess or use it if you are under the age of 21. • You can't smoke if you live in an apartment complex where the owner does not allow smoking (you may get evicted). This is particularly relevant in Nome where most residences are

There are many other restrictions that may result from the 'new' statutes, regulations, and ordinances that will be developed over the next several months. Please keep in mind that marijuana will remain controlled and many behaviors have not been decriminalized.

This message is issued to inform and hopefully, allow people to make good judgments and avoid problems.

In the interim period between the election certification and when the details are established, we will be working with the City and the State to clarify the statutes and ordinances that will allow us all to enjoy the pursuit of happiness while providing for the public safety of all our citizens

Saying It Sincerely

By Rev. Karen Sonray Our Savior Lutheran Church, Member Nome Ministerial Association

"Cast all your cares upon the Lord, for he cares for you." 1st Peter 5: 7 There are many insights to glean from this beloved Bible verse. First of all, we are asked to cast ALL our cares. We are not supposed to hold some back and let those cares pull us down. Sometimes we are so filled with worries that that negativity dominates all our thoughts. In order to make room for God's Spirit, perhaps we need to let go of those anxieties that cling to us.

I'm not talking about those cares we can do something about. Granted, we may worry about getting up in time to get our children to school. Well, we can do something about that — set an alarm. The Scripture is speaking about the cares we have no control over. We must put ALL those cares into God's hands and trust Him. We do not need to protect God from our cares

Secondly, the word "Cast" is a strong active verb. (I think of "casting" our nets or casting our line) This is not a passive act on our part, but one that is very deliberate. The more we practice it, the better we get. Intellectually we may know its best to cast our cares upon the Lord. But it takes practice to live it. Be intentional about it. This is a daily act. Recently we learned, for example, how crucial it is for health care givers to cast off ALL their protective gear after working with a patient who has Ebola. If they have not practiced this "casting," it is easy to accidently leave some of the germs behind upon them. We are called to intentionally cast all our cares upon the Lord and not hold any back. In a sense, our anxieties can act like a virus in

Finally, there is a promise in this Bible Verse. Do you hear it? "For He cares for you." God cares for ____! (Put your name in there and say it). God also cares for that person you are worried about. Trust it. And, God cares for the plural you. (The Greek word is plural—like "you all"). God cares for your family. God cares for us. God cares for all people. It is this promise that motivates us to cast all our cares upon him.

This is the same principle as Philippians 4: 6, "Do not be anxious about anything, but in everything, by prayer and petition, with thanksgiving, present your requests to God. And the peace of God, which transcends all understanding, will guard your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus."

As Martin Luther said, "Pray. Let God worry."

PET REINDEER - Homeschool kids visiting the Midnite Sun Reindeer Farm saw how Brownie the Reindeer follows caregiver Ann Davis.

Homeschoolers tour Midnite Sun Reindeer Ranch

By Sarah Miller

Bruce and Ann Davis hosted a tour of their ranch for a group of Nome's homeschooling families.

Students got to meet Brownie, the six-month old orphaned reindeer the Davises found abandoned on the tundra as an infant last spring. Another orphaned reindeer was found at the same time; the Davises named the male reindeer Blaze. They bottle fed both calves with a specially formulated milk until they were ready to forage. Their hope was that the pair could become herding animals that would help them bring in the less tame reindeers of the herd to the ranch for processing. Sadly, Blaze did not survive, so Brownie is the sole remaining full time reindeer in residence.

Students were able to pet Brownie and watch her grazing on tundra lichens and mosses as Ann Davis explained how the soil bacteria helps the reindeer digest their food. "We had to teach her how to eat tundra plants. She didn't care much for them at first, but now she always wants to graze!" Ann told the students. Brownie grazed freely as Bruce Davis took the group around the farm to view the herding chutes and corral. He described the work put into building the corral and the particularities of its shape that help to herd the animals in. Building and maintaining the corral is year round work, weather permitting. Ann and Bruce are graduates of UAF's High Latitude Range Management program, which they completed last spring. "This tour is the HLRM proram in a nutsnell, joked Bruce. Davis explained to students the responsibilities of maintaining a herd, including tagging, vaccinations, and daily visits to the herd when they are grazing away from the corral during fawning season. He also described some of the challenges of survival for the herd. "We have to be watching out for bears, wolves, even hunters at times," he explained. The reindeer in the Davis herd are identified by ear-tags and are considered livestock, not eligible for harvest by hunters. When tragedy happens, it can be catastrophic for the herd. "One day last spring, the females dropped twenty fawns. Bears got all but two of them," said Davis.

Bruce Davis began rebuilding the herd in 2010. His father, Larry Davis, ran a herd in the area for thirty years. It eventually grew to over 8000 reindeer but became integrated with wild caribou. Davises currently manage a herd of about 200. They are using the scientific principles and business planning skills acquired through the HLRM program, combined with family experience and Native cultural knowledge to develop the ranch. Part of their plan is to use reindeer as herders, ones the other reindeer will follow into the corrals and grazing areas. Another part is to develop ecotourism and education opportunities. For example, last summer the ranch hosted a group of students from the Sami Education Institute, a college in Finland which provides vocational training that integrates traditional Finnish and Sami cultural practices. Domesticated reindeer herding is a common practice in a number of circumpolar cultures. The similarities between the Finnish traditions and landscape to those of Nome were striking. " students felt like they were at home when they were here," said Ann Davis. As part of their cultural exchange, the Sami students taught the Davises the art of lassoing reindeer. "It's harder than it looks. We're still learning how," commented Davis as he gave the homeschooling students some pointers on how to hold and throw the rope.

The Davis' are using their experience with orphaned reindeers to contribute to the pool of knowledge about raising domesticated reindeer. They will also use their experience training Brownie as one of the herding reindeer to train other reindeer in the herd. members.

Bruce and Ann are hopeful that the family tradition of reindeer herding will continue with their children, grandchildren, and nieces, some of whom participated in a pilot 4H reindeer husbandry program at the UAA Fairbanks campus this sum-

Beachcomber finds WW II dog tag

By Diana Haecker

Mario Gandolfo made quite find last week when he went beachcombing on East beach. He was searching for ocean and sand-polished beach glass when a beautiful aquamarine colored piece of glass caught his eye. When Gandolfo reached down, a tiny wave washed over his hand, gently depositing an item into his hand that turned out to be a well-preserved dog tag from a soldier serving in World

The name on the tag was in the name of Earl L. Vogelar, of Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Gandolfo, who recently moved to Nome from Connecticut via Texas, said: "It was almost as if God had picked me at that time and moment to receive this dog tag that was lost at sea." He said a wave of emotions washed over him about the find. Intrigued by the mystery of how the dog tag ended up on the Nome shoreline and wondering about the identity of Earl Vogelar, Gandolfo posted his find on Facebook and reached out to several news organizations in Michigan to try to find Vogelar or his family. Through those contacts, Gandolfo discovered that Earl Vogelar was drafted into the Army during World War II and received the standard TB shot in 1943.

On Sunday, the NBC affiliate WoodTV station of Grand Rapids contacted Gandolfo and said they had found Earl Vogelar's son but, because of his work, he was not able to do an interview on TV.

However, grandson Dustin Vogelar stood in and chatted with Gandolfo on camera via Skype.

During the interview, the grandson said, due to a family feud, he had never met his grandfather.

Gandolfo learned that Earl Vogelar also had three daughters.

Talking with the relatives, he found out that Earl was stationed in Nome with the 11th Airforce Squadron and had served 40 years in the armed services. When he retired, he worked as a welder. Vogelar died in 1994.

Gandolfo said he will send the recovered dog tag to Earl Vogelar's oldest daughter. It may not get to them in time for Veteran's Day but, at least, the news reached the family in time to make their Veteran's

Council issues demands for $2.2 million NJUS bailout

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council approved conditions for extending a line of credit to Nome Joint Utility Systems to the tune of $2.2 million at a special meeting Nov. 14.

NJUS is an enterprise of City of

The money will provide interim grant and loan anticipation funds for financing utility projects. That means NJUS has money coming from grants and loans provided by state and federal agencies for utility projects. The rub is that, according to terms of the grants and loan packages, NJUS must hire contractors for the projects, pay for labor and supplies, then apply to the approved grant and loan pot for reimburse-

NJUS must front the money and then collect. NJUS has dipped into operations money to pay project costs, but still has money owed to vendors that must be paid to get reimbursements.

There must be interim financing available in coffers to meet cash flow requirements. That interim financing has not been available for several reasons—reimbursement paperwork not timely filed, power generators using more fuel than expected, and, according to utility manager John K. Handeland, a shortage of revenues from sales of services and electrical power.

The utility recently raised water and sewer rates, but the charge for electricity has not been changed since 1995, 20 years ago.

Because NJUS had too little money rattling in the piggy bank to cover cash flow demands, it went for bank line of credit. NJUS got caught in a bind when its usual bank, Wells Fargo, refused to extend a line of credit without collateral. NJUS still had a fuel loan from Wells Fargo with a balance of $574,000, confirmed by Handeland, still owing and delayed by assigning operating cash flow to reimbursable vendor and contractor payments.

Additionally, bank staff knew the issue of NJUS needing a rate in-

Nome Gold Alaska to begin blasting near Nome airport

By Diana Haecker

Last week, the Alaska Dept. of Transportation sent out a press release announcing daily closure of the Nome International Airport from 6 a.m. until 7 a.m. due to blasting activities on adjacent Nome Gold Alaska Corp. land. The closures are scheduled from Nov. 15 until June 1,

"We haven't done a lot of local announcements because we still don't have the final official document of approval," said Nome Gold Alaska general manager Randy Powelson on Monday. The company is waiting on final approval from the Federal Aviation Administration. The company has secured approval of their drilling and blasting program from the federal Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Administration, the Army Corps of Engineers and the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation, according to a Nome Gold Alaska Corp. press release. Powelson told the Nome Nugget in a phone conversation that he expects the FAA's approval to come soon. Blasting will begin either the end of this week or beginning of the week of

for permission to set off explosions seven days a week, but currently only has permits to do so five days a week, Monday through Friday. The blasting location is north of the main runway and west of the North-South runway, according to a map sent by Nome Gold to the Nome Nugget.

Timing for explosions between 6 a.m. and 7 a.m. was coordinated with flight services and the aviation department at DOT to minimize impact to air travel.

Typically, the Nome airport does not have scheduled air traffic this early in the morning, DOT Aviation Manager Jeremy Worrall said. He said just to be on the safe side, the airport closure is in effect during the set times. Worrall said that after the blasting operations are finished, an airport crew will conduct a Foreign Object Debris inspection of the runways to ensure the airport is safe for aircraft operations.

Worrall said in case of a medivac or other aircraft emergency that may occur during the closure times, that the airport, FAA Flight Service Station and Nome Gold will be in close contact to suspend any blasting to minimize potential impacts to

The blasting operations will allow continued placer mining activities throughout the winter. Once the blasts break up the frozen overburden and soil, the paydirt will be loaded on trucks and transported to the company's wash plant. Powelson said the Nome Police Department and the fire department were informed of their plans.

Nome Volunteer Fire Department Chief Jim West Jr. confirmed that the fire department was made aware of the blasting. "We knew that something was coming down the pike because they brought in 20 containers of ammonium nitrate on the last barge," West said. West met with Powelson and was given the "rundown" of the operation.

The Local Emergency Planning Committee was not informed. LEPC chairman Tom Vaden said mining operations, even those that include explosive work, don't have to inform local emergency planners about their

BSSD Board puts Superintendent on administrative leave

For undisclosed reasons, the Bering Strait School Board put BSSD Superintendent Brett Agenbroad on administrative leave until his contract expires in June 2015. The decision was made during last week's BSSD board meeting, board president Aurora Johnson said. Johnson declined to comment on the reasons and circumstances that led to the board's decision. "All I can say is that he's on administrative leave until his contract is over by the end of June 2015," she said. There are no investigations pending. It appears that philosophical differences may have been the reason for cutting Agenbroad's time at BSSD short.

Dr. Bobby Bolen was named as interim Superintendent. Bolen has been in the region for several years as the principal of the Hogarth Kingeekuk Sr. Memorial School in Savoonga and was most recently the principal of the Anthony A. Andrews school in St. Michael. Dr. Bolen was also the coordinator for federal programs and professional development for the Bering Strait School District in Unalakleet from 2008 to 2011. Before moving to Alaska, he worked as an administrative dean and teacher in Florida. He holds an Ed D and M Ed in Educational Leadership from the University of Central Florida. Dr. Bolen completed his superintendent endorsement at the University of Alaska in May 2013. Bolen was one of the three final candidates who applied for the Nome School District superintendent's job

Brett Agenbroad came to BSSD from the Sierra Vista School District in Arizona in July 2013. He was the superintendent of the Annette Island School District in Metlakatla prior to Sierra Vista. He has also been the principal and superintendent of the Topak School District in Arizona.

ON LEAVE — Brett Agenbroad was put on administrative leave.

Letters –

It has been three agonizing months since the passing our son Waylon Z. Okpealuk. The thing is, he was taken from us deliberately. We knew him, and you didn't. He was taught not to be suicidal, every time we hear of one, we would talk to him and tell him it is not the way out. We would tell him not to do that to himself. We could pull together and work it out. We know he never would do that to himself. He promised his mom he never would go out like that.

Losing our son is very personal. Something happened that fateful night August 13, 2014; we already know. To enlighten you, he was [attacked] by a jealous ex-boyfriend in his own room. One, who barged into our home, went straight to his room and assaulted him. After his mom settled it down, we asked him to leave but he didn't. He sat in his room crying, so we left him alone. We were too nice we should have reported the assault. Now look where our son is, gone from us forever. Our mistake was we didn't report the as-This jealous ex-boyfriend could not have done it himself, he

We cannot help but hope for the worst for you and everything will be fruitless in the end. One mother said, "I'm glad your son is dead." Now that really brought attention to us that you, your spouse and family know something. What kind of person are you to say that? Another mother acts up at the mention of our son's name. And still another mother jumps to conclusion at the mention of our son's name. To us those are signs guilt of knowing something about Waylon Zachary Okpealuk, our son, our good son who never meant harm to anyone not even himself. How blind can you be? We know our son, he would never suicide, ... he loved life and lived it to the fullest, helping others. Of course we can't ask you to do the right thing, being that you are cold, cold hearted.

PAC It In

We need to send 'em packing. The election is over and thankfully we are spared from the political attack ads. The ugly boogieman, pants-on-fire and too darn repetitive television ads are over. What's even scarier is that they seem to have worked. Look what happened. Now that the election is over we have to get rid of this means of political horsepucky.

Problem of the Political Action Committees, better known as PACs, needs to be taken to the Supreme Court by independent citizens. We can't rely on our Congress to outlaw the practice of big money buying into campaign advertising. Too many of our senators and congressmen have benefited from PACs' powerful money. PACs wallow in big bucks and they can sway political influence merely because they can and they are legal.

The poison PACs put into politics has fueled divisive government. Why is our Congress known as the "No" Congress? We don't need divisiveness in government; we need to be freed from the claws of PACs. We need a Supreme Court decision to control political spending that allows the super wealthy to skew the votes. We know that big money talks and it screams over the voice of reason and the little guys. Let's turn down its volume and outlaw the PACs. — N.L.M.—

Sound Off

Arctic Circle By U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski

As Alaskans and the rest of America emerge from their election bunkers and turn on their televisions again, we are faced with another pressing issue of lasting importance: making the Arctic a national and international priority in a manner that benefits those who live in the far north. Five months from now, in April 2015, the United States will assume the chair of the Arctic Council, the intergovernmental forum among the eight nations with territory inside the Arctic Circle and that includes active participation of the Arctic indigenous groups, with 'observer nations' that range from Italy to South Korea. Having the Chair through 2017 means that the United States will have the opportunity to focus the world's attention on our priorities for the

As evidenced by the 1,400 plus participants at the recent 2014 Arctic Circle Assembly in Reykjavik, Iceland, it is clear that the Arctic conversation has gained momentum. Not only did the U.S. Special Representative for the Arctic, Admiral Papp, and I attend and speak, but so did the Chancellor of Germany and a senior Minister from Singapore. While many around the world are making the Arctic a priority, I left Reykjavik concerned that there is limited recognition by the international community of the needs of those who live in the Arctic.

For many non-Arctic residents, the Arctic is a pristine, untouched environment that, like a snow globe on a shelf, must not be disturbed. It may come to news to some, but the Arctic is home to approximately four million people, and humans have been living, hunting, and working in the Arctic for thousands of years – since before the term "Arctic" was even coined to describe the region - harvesting the natural resources of the region and developing the land. A focus on climate change and its impact on the Arctic is certainly warranted, but it cannot be our sole focus, and it should not prevent those who live in the Arctic from developing the resources that are available within their region in order to create a better standard of living.

As I noted in my remarks to the conference, as similar as the people of the Arctic are, there are really two different Arctics with different sets of needs. There is the Nordic Arctic of Norway, Sweden, Finland and Iceland where the infrastructure is developed, multiple transportation options exist, and reliable telecommunications and internet access is commonplace. Then there is the Arctic in Alaska, Canada, Greenland, and parts Russia that still struggle to access clean drinking water, affordable energy, and essential services. In those areas, expansion of existing and new economic development remains the highest priority in order to provide hope for the sustainability of our communities, to retain the best and the brightest in our remote villages, and to help counter the high suicide and domestic abuse rates we experience.

When the United States takes over as chair of the Arctic Council, I am hopeful that our agenda will include support for the newly established Arctic Economic Council (AEC) that seeks to bring businesses together with Arctic communities to promote economic investment and benefit those who live in the Arctic. Helping raise awareness of the AEC within the United States, perhaps through interactions with chambers of commerce across the country, will help increase our collective knowledge and interest - and investment – in the Arctic as a nation.

Next year we will be in the driver's seat on policies, both nationally and internationally, that impact the Arctic. Let's recognize the benefits as well as the challenges that come from being an Arctic nation and remember our responsibility to those who live in the region. After all, access to clean drinking water should not be too much to ask for in the 21st century.

Alaskans are by nature (and temperament) pioneering types, drawn to opportunity and adventure. Let's not let the rest of the world rush to the Arctic

NOAA's releases state-wide Alaska Oil Spill Risk Analy-

On Tuesday, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration released an Alaska Oil Spill Risk Analysis, which is a screening tool for fuel spill response planning. It identifies locations and species at risk so that local, state and federal planners can assess risks and consider restoration actions that may be required or in the event of a fuel spill.

In the Alaska Oil Spill Risk Analysis, NOAA developed a picture of fuel spill risk using past vessel and facility spill data, spill planning scenarios and impacts to habitat and wildlife. The analysis examines the full spectrum of fuel spill scenarios—from the high probability-low consequence incident involving less than one barrel of oil, to the low probability-high consequence incident that a major spill would present. NOAA's Alaska Oil Spill Risk Analysis model assesses and considers the following: Current and future out to the year 2025, 14 geographic zones, based on current Contingency Planning Regions for the state; three habitat types: shoreline, seafloor, and sea ice; 36 species, including marine mammals, birds, fish, and invertebrates; various types of oil: crude oils, heavy oils, light oils, and distillates and seasonal differences.

Jeanne Hanson, the Assistant Regional Administrator for NOAA Fisheries Alaska Regional Office of Habitat Conservation explains. "Working with a variety of experts on oil spill impacts, NOAA developed this risk analysis to ensure that we and our partners act strategically and effectively to respond to oil spills, to assess damage to natural resources, and to plan for the restoration of damaged resources." NOAA's first ever state-wide Alaska Oil Spill Risk Analysis can be accessed at www.alaskafisheries.noaa.gov/habitat/restoration/oilspill/risk.htm

Coalition challenges U.S. Fish and Wildlife rule

Last week, a coalition of conservation organizations filed a lawsuit against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, challenging a rule that permits oil companies, to harm Pacific walruses during oil drilling beginning as early as next year in key walrus feeding areas.

The lawsuit asserts that due to climate change-induced decrease of sea ice, Chukchi Sea walruses are at peril. Walruses depend on the ice for resting, raising their young, feeding and avoiding predators. As a result of this melting, the walruses have been forced ashore in recent years. Just a few weeks ago, 35,000 walruses hauled out on the Alaskan Arctic coast.

The Fish and Wildlife Service adopted regulations that allow for "the incidental take of walruses in connection with oil and gas activities." The agency also acknowledged that walruses could be affected adversely in large numbers in crucial habitat areas like the Hanna Shoal. Shell Oil intends to drill as early as 2015

Oil operations have the potential to chase walruses away from foodrich foraging areas, trigger stampedes and harm the animals with deafeningly loud seismic blasts. The conservation groups maintain that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife rule puts the mammals in harm's way by allowing oil company operations in key walrus foraging areas in the Chukchi Sea. Earthjustice, on behalf of Alaska Wilderness League, the Center for Biological Diversity, Greenpeace, Resisting Environmental Destruction on Indigenous Lands, Sierra Club and the Natural Resources Defense Council are plaintiffs in the lawsuit.

"The Fish and Wildlife Service needs to do a much better job of protecting walrus mothers and calves struggling to survive in the dramatically changing Chukchi Sea," said Earthjustice Attorney Erik Grafe. "The challenge seeks to protect walruses from suffering potential serious harm and harassment at the hands of companies like Shell Oil, which crashed and burned during its Arctic Ocean drilling efforts in 2012. Walruses are already under tremendous stress from climate change - their sea ice home is literally melting away. Without adequate analysis, the challenged rules would add to walruses' woes by allowing drilling and risking oil spills in the areas most important for food and resting. What's more, drilling would accelerate the climate change already causing so much trouble for walruses.'

New study found Alaskan Polar Bear population dropped

A study published in the journal Ecological Applications found that Arctic warming has driven a 40-percent decline in the number of polar bears in eastern Alaska and western Canada. The Southern Beaufort Sea polar bear population has dropped to 900 bears, a severe decline since the last estimate in 2006 that documented more than 1,500 bears. The Southern Beaufort Sea polar bears live in eastern Alaska and western Canada and are one of only two polar bear populations in the United States.

Polar bears suffered low survival between 2004 and 2006, when unfavorable ice conditions limited the polar bears' access to ice seals. Polar bear cubs were hit especially hard; only two of the 80 cubs observed in Alaska between 2003 and 2007 are known to have survived.

The Southern Beaufort Sea population appears to have stabilized between 2008 and 2010, possibly due to unusual oceanographic conditions, less competition, or because some polar bears stayed on land during the summer, feeding on subsistencehunted bowhead whale carcasses. But the study's authors cautioned that given projections for continued climate warming these changes are unlikely to counterbalance the extensive habitat degradation projected to occur over the long term.

stamp legislation passes house

Legislation to address the price of federal duck stamps - a permit required to hunt migratory waterfowl passed the House of Representatives with an amendment included by Alaskan Congressman Don Young to exempt Alaskan subsistence hunters from being required to purchase the annual permit. The bill passed the House by voice vote. It would increase the price of a federal duck stamp from $15 to $25.

Congressman Young's amendment applies to Alaskan subsistence hunters residing in rural areas. It would effectively reverse a 2001 policy decision by the Department of Interior Regional Solicitor that requires all subsistence duck hunters to purchase federal duck stamps.

NJUS bailout

crease that was eroding balances, he said Monday.

"I've done as much as I humanly could do, every day of the week, and there are things I was not able to do," Handeland said. "I've just been stretched too thin in the process."

The City was willing to cover the temporary bailout, but as the bank, the Council wanted to see some books, some collateral and security for the $2.2 million line of credit. The money it is making available to NJUS on a loan basis comes from the City's self-insurance and Public Employees Retirement System backup savings account.

The NJUS Board of Directors is slated to meet Nov. 18 and vote on a resolution accepting the disbursement and security agreements with City of Nome underlying the line of

The Council and the City's Diretor of Finances Julie Liew wants the NJUS books to open for review with keystrokes from Liew's computer.

The City also wants dibs on money due back from grant agencies as guaranteed payback for the $2.2 million.

Handeland agreed the books should be open. He said that Liew would have access from her computer within a week—it would just take some adjustment in technology.

However, Handeland made clear that there needs to be a spirit of cooperation. "I need to feel that we are working together in this process. The NJUS employees need to feel that we are working in a cooperative manner," Handeland said.

Tuesday, he noted that the Council had asked for books to be fully accessible to Liew three weeks ago, but that had not happened.

Councilman Jerald Brown said he could approve the line of credit, but with rules:

The $2.2 million was to be used only for paying positions that would get grant reimbursement. Second, the reimbursements from the agencies are to go directly back to City of Nome. Third, NJUS would retain a rate consultant who would directly report to the City. Fourth, the city finance director, currently Julie Liew, would have full access to the NJUS accounting and grant system records.

Handeland agreed.

Liew said she had concerns about NJUS accounting. She wasn't 100 percent comfortable but, on the positive side, the situation could be improved.

The $2.2 million do not address the pay off costs and debt costs down the road, she said. The City needs to look at how changes could be implemented internally and procedure-"I am comfortable if the money goes our way [City], not NJUS," she said.

Bumping up utility rates is included in a package of agreements put to NJUS by the City of Nome incuding hiring a rate consultant. Handeland has maintained the intention throughout the crisis to have a rate consultant on the job by Dec. 1

Good idea, Brown agreed. "Looks to me that the current state of NJUS and its accounting and finances are a mess. I'm really nervous about that, but that needs to be addressed. I think a rate consultant is a step in the right direction," he said. "I want the rate consultant to report directly to the City, not just NJUS. I want him to report directly to the Council without any appearance of interference not that this is going to happen – but without leaving any appearance of influence by NJUS.

Handeland replied that he did not know whether the rate consultant could be influenced by NJUS. The utility has to input number of kwh use anticipated, the number of customers and so forth. Then the report would go to the NJUS Board of Directors, who would advise the NJUS administration and the Council.

Brown wanted the report to also go directly to the Council.

In the security, pledge and disbursement agreement between the utility and City of Nome, NJUS is putting up as collateral reimbursements due from Alaska Energy Authority wind farm construction, $863,392; state Dept. of Environmental Conservation, federal USDA Rural Utility Service, a total of $3.591.807 in grants; plus $1,608,000 in loans for water and sewer projects: a security package worth about $6 million.

Additionally, NJUS pledged all revenue received from water, sewer and electrical services. NJUS agreed to perform all tasks related to getting reimbursement from the agencies and to allow City of Nome oversee management of the collateral. Additionally NJUS must give City of Nome prior notification of any proposed disposition of the collateral. NJUS must consult a financial advisor by the end of the year and implement all suggestions received or offer explanation as to why not.

In the agreement the City nailed down payments from the line of credit for documentation and timeli-

Advances will be made directly from the City to Wells Fargo for fuel loan payments to avoid late fees, and to vendors, consultants and contractors upon invoices. NJUS will provide supporting documentation that the vendors and contractors' invoices will be reimbursed by DEC or USDA.

NJUS will make requests for advances from the line of credit directly to the city manager, currently Josie Bahnke, for approval.

NJUS must provide verification to the City that each check has cleared Wells Fargo.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz wanted to know the immediate status of the utility's finances with receipt of the $2.2 million. Finances would still be thin, Handeland replied. "We have decreased sales, more costs, burned more fuel than we expected, lagging behind in water and sewer projects and more depreciation issues. Since 1995 rates have stayed the same. Over time, fuel prices and wages have gone up and this was not addressed in rates," he said. "We pared back on personnel. We need to determine how to address operational issues and how to spread the work load."

The vote on the line of credit went 4 to 1; yesses from Councilmen Pomeranz, Andersen, Green and Brown: a no vote from Councilman Culley. Councilman Tom Sparks did not attend.

"I voted no because there are too many unanswered questions," Culley said Monday. "When this funding was first asked of the City, there was no mention of the need for the fuel bill. After time, that surfaced. What else don't we know about?"

At a prior work session, a report from Handeland on NJUS finances dated Oct. 29 did mention that extensions had been sought on making fuel payments to the bank, but did not name the amount owed.

He has confirmed the figure at $574,000.

Middle Beach could become Ada Blackjack Park

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Planning Commission continues to work on turning Middle Beach into a multi-use family park with an amphitheater, picnic area, sports courts and play equipment.

During a work session Nov. 11, the panel discussed how to keep Nome's small but active chronic drunk population from turning the park into a booze-fueled flophouse, profanity auditorium and pissoir.

The consensus was that designs must deal with the issue of drunks in the park, so that the community can enjoy the use of the facility.

Middle Beach lies off River Street west of the Mini Convention Center and the sewer and water treatment facility.

Commissioner Sara Lizak suggested a proactive solution—to check into organizing a day shelter for inebriates who are also homeless.

Other commissioners and members of the public stated: Let's just enforce the laws or make stiffer laws on public intoxication.

On a positive note, Nome-promoter and history buff Leonard Boardway proposed that the park honor Ada Blackjack as Ada Blackjack Golden Beaches Park. Commissioners put the idea on the list of proposed names, but thought that the name could be shortened to Ada Blackjack Park.

Ada Blackjack? "Ada Blackjack is a true story of survival," Boardway explained. As a young woman, she signed on to cook for a group of explorers who crossed the Chukchi Sea in 1921 to the uninhabited Wrangel Island in northern Siberia to plant the Canadian flag and claim it for Canada.

Blackjack, 23, took the assignment to meet medical expenses for her son who had tuberculosis.

The men, three Americans and one Canadian, met their demise, but Ada Blackjack survived alone except for the expedition cat "Vic." In the wilderness she used subsistence skills and her wits until the crew of the Donaldson brought her back to Nome in August 1923. Blackjack, an Inupiat, grew up in Spring Creek and Solomon but moved to Nome. Allan Crawford, a Canadian, led the expedition that was financed and backed by Vilhjalmur Stefansson, arctic explorer.

"If you don't show your history, you lose your history," Boardway said, speaking for his naming proposal. Much of the information about Blackjack comes from the 2003 book, Ada Blackjack: A True Story of Survival in The Arctic by Jennifer Niven.

In other action, the commission reviewed and tossed a proposed draft nonconforming use ordinance back to the administration. The ordinance deals with a zoning issue, in which land use prior to the 2008 zoning code would be "grandfathered in."

The ordinance came out of the city attorney's office and said that a preexisting use had to be a commercial use with the proprietor having possessed a business license for the activity and paid City sales tax prior to 2008.

"Nah. Foul, Ixnay, Tilt!, " cried the commissioners. The City cannot apply requirements retroactively, they said. It cannot pass a law in 2014 to be in effect in the past.

There is no requirement that a use be commercial and licensed from 2008 until 2014 when zoning went into law, Lizak pointed out.

"Essentially, as is, the ordinance is going to punish citizens for not following a law that was not a law in the past," she said.

"It's goofily written, at best," Commissioner John Odden added.

The ordinance, sought by Nome Councilmen Stan Andersen and Tom Sparks, harkens back to a recent case in which a disputed bid for mechanical work for the City was awarded to Rolland Trowbridge, Trinity Sails Repair, who had leased a property that Sparks and Andersen noted had not been in use as an auto repair shop for the prior 24 months, and therefore such use fell under "sunset" according to the 2008 zoning code. Trowbridge was able to present evidence that the property had been borrowed and used for vehicle repair, although it was not open for commercial business.

In other business, the commission discussed an informal request by Dan Walsh to rezone the area where Big Jim's auto repair stands at 300 East K Street from Residential to General Use. The commission may not "spot zone" a specific property, but could alter a larger piece of the zone. City Planner Eileen Bechtol advised the panel that there are other properties adjacent that "probably should have been zoned General Use."

Such action would remove the two-year business sunset clause from the property that was in commercial use. The 2008 Zoning Code makes the property residential. The property has always been in commercial use, Walsh said in an e-mail to the NPC.

When he built it 30 years ago, there were no residences around it—just swamp and tundra.

Changing the zoning according to law, requires a public hearing and notification of all owners of property in the area to be rezoned, as well as an application, fee and fee agree-

Commission Chairman Larry Pederson suggested that the surrounding property owners be polled to see if there was strong opposition before the Commission went through all the formal procedures for naught.

"If the majority are against it or there is something we haven't looked at, we don't have to go through the whole process," he said.

Finally, the Commission asked Bechtol to draft an ordinance for its consideration that would require more substantial survey monuments.

Rebar markers are easily destroyed, Building Inspector Greg Smith said, and that puts property into limbo at a significant cost to the property owner for a fresh survey.

The Nome Planning Commission will have its next regular meeting on Dec. 9

Nome man found dead in his home

By Diana Haecker

In the early morning at 6:45 a.m on November 13, Nome Police responded to a report of an unresponsive person inside a residence on the west side of Nome.

The responding police officer looked through an outside window and saw that the person in medical distress. The person, Wesley Register, was not responding to all attempts to make contact.

With RAUN

According to NPD Chief John Papasodora, Register was alone inside a locked apartment and the door had to be forcibly opened. Police found Register dead.

Wesley Register's body was transported to the Medical examiner's office in Anchorage for an autopsy to determine cause and manner of death. NPD suspects no foul play and completed its investigation. Next of kin were notified.

Board returns from conference with school priorities

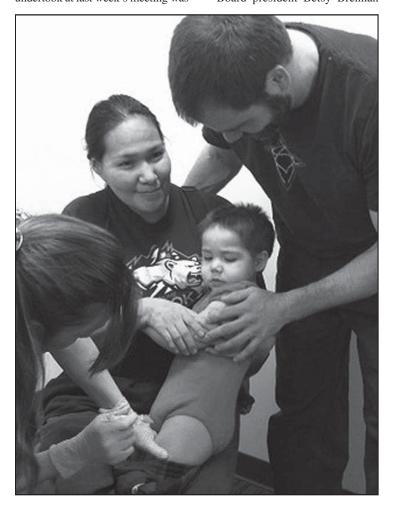

By Kristine McRae

Fresh from the 2014 Alaska Association of School Board's annual conference, members of the Nome Board of Education reported "information and inspiration" as their takeaway from this year's gathering. "The conference fills our heads," said board member Jennifer Reader. "We are reenergized to come back and keep moving forward. It's frustrating that the legislature doesn't want to fund schools, but with the new information we will be better equipped to meet those challenges."

One of the challenges the board undertook at last week's meeting was to review the district's list of legislative priorities. Most of the 20 items on the list are statements put forth by the AASB and are applicable to districts statewide, but Nome's first three priorities are for Capital Improvement Projects. The district hopes to be reimbursed by the state for the new LED lighting installation and a new gym floor, as well as to be approved for monies to upgrade the electrical equipment, which brings electricity from the city-maintained poles into the school. The current system is 37 years old, and will cost an estimated $650,000 to replace.

asked that the list include an opposition to the joint resolution that would introduce a voucher system for education in Alaska. The implication is that families could use their education dollars at institutions other than public schools. "Last year we wrote a resolution against it. We have a lot at stake as a public school system," Brennan said. "Plus, using public money for private schools will take monies away from our public schools." The board added the resolution then looked at another measure, which would direct student learning data to account for 50 percent of teacher evaluation scores. The Nome School Board thinks this percentage is too high, and they are recommending a percentage of no more than 20 for evaluative marks.

As the board discussed Nome's potential for legislative funding, Superintendent Steve Gast acknowledged that funding was far from guaranteed, especially to rural districts. "It's frustrating," Gast said. "They suggested the rural schools do innovative things [to compete for funding], and we are doing innovative things. We have a five-star charter school, we have a five-star extension school, we've got an elementary school that's moved up to a 4-star school, we've got distance learning. We've got all these different things. Those are innovative. And they say it's not enough." Gast reported that other rural districts he's talked with are feeling the same frustration of not being "innovative" enough to secure adequate funding. At the end of the evening the board was ready to approve the resolutions, which included a couple of changes and additions. They were also eager to approve the recent audit report, but Betsy Brennan noticed a word change in the final version that would significantly change the meaning of the intended sentiment. After changes are made, the board will again review the audit for ap-

Nome-Beltz principal Harlan Heinrich reported a busy October, which included his attendance at the Alaska Association of Secondary School Principals Conference. "The theme was 'Telling Our Stories',' Heinrich said. "And they had excellent keynote speakers." Heinrich also shared that a number of Beltz students are struggling academically. "It's the end of the quarter," he explained, "and I am meeting with the teachers to see what we can do to enable students to be more successful." Heinrich said the school is working toward after school tutoring for senior high students in addition to the tutoring offered through Nome Eskimo Community for junior high students from 4:10-5:00. Mr. Heinrich was pleased to announce the student of the month for the junior high was Ayomide Ayowole-Obi. Cross was chosen for the high school. In his report, student repre-Oliver Hoogendorn sentative brought the board up to speed on recent sporting events and student clubs. He also told the board that, in lieu of a parade for Veteran's Day this year, the JROTC retired the flag at Nome-Beltz.

In his update, Nome Elementary Principal Paul Clark reported that the reading intervention classes were going well. An instructor from SRA, the publishing company that prints both the Corrective Reading (used in the fifth and sixth grade classes) and Reading Mastery (which is designed for kindergarten through fourth graders), recently visited Nome to assist teachers in using the programs. Board members elected to reschedule their annual board retreat from November 14 and 15 to December 5 and 6 because of scheduling conflicts. Joseph Reeves with the Alaska Association of School Boards will travel to Nome to facilitate a two-day encounter at which the board will conduct an internal evaluation and talk about their goals and priorities for the coming year.

Two Nome students attend Youth Leader-ship Institute

By Josie Bourdon

Nome-Beltz students Julie Jackson and Kelsie Crisci recently attended the Youth Leadership Institute (YLI) in Anchorage. YLI was held in conjunction with the Association of Alaska School Board's (AASB) annual conference November 6-9. Over 70 students participated in this annual event, which was sponsored by the AASB.

Julie and Kelsie attended workshops that fostered team-building and communication. They learned and practiced leadership skills while interacting with peers from across the state of Alaska.

The attendees had the opportunity to hear many inspirational speeches. Loren Anderson, from the Alaska Native Heritage Center, spoke about cultural awareness and goal setting. Liz Medicine Crow and her colleagues from First Alaskans Institute lead a discussion about the social, economic and educational challenges of youth and how to positively address the issues

Julie and Kelsie, along with their peers, had several opportunities to meet with statewide school board members to discuss educational matters. They met in roundtable format to voice school and community issues such as grades, sports, bullying, school climate, activities for youth (or lack thereof), among others. YLI participants presented skits depicting lessons learned during the institute at banquet. The skits were well received by the AASB attendees.

Sunday was the final morning of the institute. The youth were charged to transform what they learned into an action plan for each of their respective schools. Julie and Kelsie thought cyber bullying needed to be addressed. They thought a poster-making session with NBHS students would be one way to address the issue. Ample time to reflect and say their goodbyes to friends culminated the four-day event.

NEA helps Food Bank

Every school year provides students and teachers a chance to start fresh and try something new.

Members of the Nome Education Association decided that one of our new goals for the year would be to connect and collaborate more with organizations and groups within the community.

With Thanksgiving right around the corner, Nome EA wanted to thank the Food Bank for all the work it does to provide food to families in need.

On Saturday, November 1, ten volunteers came to help get the Food Bank in order. For three hours, NPS employees swept and mopped the floor, wiped down the shelves, and organized the items in the pantry.

They even had time to get into the back rooms to unpack some of the donations that had not yet been put on shelves

Prior to the Food Bank event, they participated in the NPS Community Engagement Night.

They were also at the Health Fair teaching visitors how healthy habits, like a good night's sleep, leads to successful students at school.

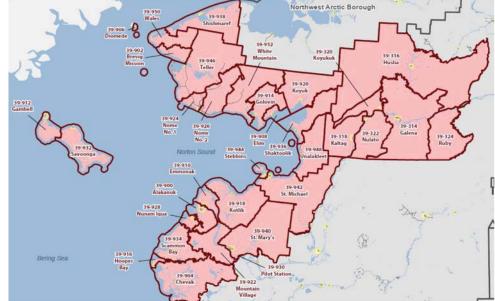

Nome EA hopes to progress with its involvement in many of the amazing organizations that make Nome a wonderful place to live, and that NPS staff will continue to be active and engaged members of the community.

Nome, Barrow tie for 7th at state volleyball tourney

By Keith Conger

The Nome-Beltz girls volleyball season came to a conclusion last weekend at the 3A state championships in Anchorage. Nanooks had qualified for the tournament as the number two team from the Western Conference. They drew Homer, the number one team from the Southcentral Conference, on Thursday as their first opponent. The Nanooks fell to Homer 25-10, 25-11, 25-12.

Nome was eliminated from the tournament on Friday by Grace Christian, the second ranked team from the Southcentral conference. Nome lost to Grace in straight sets 25-8, 25-11, 25-5.

Barrow, the number one team from the Western Conference, met up with Valdez, the number two team from the Aurora Conference in the first round, losing three sets to one. They lost to Nikiski, the number three team from the Southcentral Conference, by the same Barrow's second loss dropped them into a tie for seventh place with Nome.

The standings were filled out with Grace Christian in third place, Nikiski in fourth, Valdez in fifth, and Homer in sixth.

Three Nanooks received individual honors. Kailey Witrosky was voted Player of the Game for Nome in its match against Homer. Rene Merchant received that distinction for the Grace Christian match. Jane Tidwell and Kim Clark were recognized as members of the tournament's Good Sport

Coach Lucas Frost said that he was pleased at how well the girls came together this year as a team. "This is one of the nicest crews I've ever had," said Frost after the tournament. One of the most positive points in the season, said Frost, is that the team set a record as the first Nanooks volleyball team to qualify for the state tournament for three consecutive years.

With the tournament complete, Frost's thoughts started to look toward next season. He, and assistant coach Bill Magness will have three starting seniors to replace. Two of the players, Alyssa Bushey and Tidwell played as middle hitters. The biggest transition, however, for the Nanooks might be replacing Rene Merchant at the setter position.

Volleyballers from Bering Straits Region help Mt. Edgecumbe win state title

by Keith Conger

Five girls from Nome and another from Golovin helped their Mount Edgecumbe High School Braves volleyball team win the 3A state volleyball title this past weekend. The championship matches were held at the Alaska Airlines Center on the campus of the University of Alaska – Anchorage.

Senior Kathy Holly of Nome was one of the main contributors for the Braves during the season. According to the Mount Edgecumbe website, she ranked first on the team in assists with 332, first on the team in service aces with 71, and second on the team in kill shots with 154.

Senior Renatta Olson of Golovin led the team in defense for the year with 253 digs. She was fourth on the team in service percentage, making over 93% of her serves

Other girls from Nome playing for the 2014 Mount Edgecumbe squad were senior Caitlyn Luce, junior Tori Thomas, and freshman Kerry Ahmasuk. Kevynn Ann Cox, also from Nome, served as the team man-

According to the ASAA website, the Braves beat the team from Nikiski in straight sets in their opening match of the state tournament. They followed that up with a four set victory over Valdez. The Braves advanced to the championship match by beating Monroe Catholic 3 - 1.

Since the state tournament has a true double elimination format, Monroe was able to work its way back up through the loser bracket to play Mount Edgecumbe in the championship match. Monroe edged Mount Edgecumbe 3 -2, thus setting up a winner-take-all set to 30 points. The Braves were able to secure first place by beating Monroe 33 - 31. According to an article by Alaska Dispatch

News, the championship match had 42 tied scores and 28 lead changes.

JROTC retires flags and honors vets

By Jannelle Trowbridge

On November 11, the Nome-Beltz H.S. Army JROTC conducted it's annual Veterans Day and Flag Retirement Ceremony. They held formation at the high school flagpole and rendered honors to the U.S. and Alaska flags.

After hearing several patriotic speeches, they ceremoniously retired and destroyed the U.S. and Alaska flags from the Nome community which had outlived their usefulness.

Cadet Lieutenant Colonel Hunter Bellamy, battalion commander, spoke about the flag and what it represents. He described how the white colors symbolize purity, the red symbolizes sacrifice and honor, and blue is unity. He also spoke to the importance of properly retiring worn out

Lieutenant Colonel Bob Blake told everyone that the first things that come to most people's minds when they think of our country is those serving in uniform and the U.S. flag. It is very fitting to remember the U.S. flag as well as the Veterans of all services on this holiday before the event.

Servicemen and women wear the flag on the upper right sleeve of their uniform with the union and the stars to the front like a flag being carried on a staff into battle with the white and red stripes flowing behind.

There were about 45 cadets in the JROTC who participated in the ceremony. Every year, the JROTC conducts a flag retirement ceremony to meet the Army Cadet Command requirements for service learning.

by Keith Conger

The Nome-Beltz wresting team posted a third place finish out of 13 teams at the Bob Bailey Wrestling Tournament on Saturday at Chugiak High School. The Nanooks trailed only 4A teams from South Anchorage High School and Wasilla High School in the meet standings. Nome was the lone 3A team in the top 9. They were able to outscore 4A high school squads from East Anchorage, Chugiak, Bartlett, Service, Palmer, and Eagle River. The wrestlers from 3A Barrow rounded out the top 10.

Coach Dudley Homelvig explained his team did not wrestle their best in the two duel meets against Eagle River and Chugiak earlier in the weekend. In those contests Emery Booshu, and Nolan Horner each beat their opponents. Leif Erikson beat the Chugiak wrestler in a fall, and went unopposed against Eagle River. Joe Cross was able to pin his opponent from Eagle River.

In the head-to-head matches against Chugiak and Eagle River, Nome was only able to send one person from each weight class to score points. According to Homelvig, since the Nanooks do not have wrestlers at each classification, they were at a distinct disadvantage. Nome lost to Chugiak 43 – 30, and to Eagle River 60 – 18.

"The team wrestled really well on Saturday, however," said Homelvig. Nome had a more level playing field in the Bob Bailey tournament format; two wresters per team could participate in each weight class. The Nanooks took advantage of this by entering Gabe Smith as their second wrestler in the 145 pound classification. According to the website Trackwrestling.com, Smith helped his team by winning three matches and scoring 11 points. He made it to the third place match, where he lost by an 8 - 6 decision against Logan Nerland of South Anchorage. Without Smith's points, the Nanooks might have taken sixth.

The Nanooks number one wrestler at the 145 pound weight class was Emery Booshu. Booshu met up with 2014 4A state champ Rami Pellumbi of South Anchorage in the championship match, winning a 3 – 1 decision. Booshu was voted the meet's Outstanding Wrestler.

Nome's Leif Erikson took first place in the 138 pound division, eeking out a narrow 4-3 decision over Noah Ottum of South Anchorage in the championship match. Two of Erikson's four match victories were pins.

Volleyball

The championship is the third in four years for Mount Edgecumbe. The Braves have placed either first or second in each of the last five years.

Mount Edgecumbe High School is a member of the Southeast Volleyball Conference, which has one berth for the state tournament. The Braves qualified for the spot by beating both their neighbors - the Sitka Wolves and the Petersburg Vikings. Mount Edgecumbe entered the state tournament with an 17 -0 record in match play. Four of their victories came over 4A schools Juneau-Douglas and Thunder Mountain.

The state tournament is coordinated by the ASAA, the Alaska School Activities Association. The 3A tournament is designed for schools that have populations between 150 and 500 students.

The Alaska Airlines Center, which lies adjacent to the Providence Medical Center had its grand opening on September 5th, 2014. It is a multi-purpose arena that seats 5000.

Harold George Charles Jr. "Hoss" was born to Harold and Frances Charles the evening of February 22, 1955 at their home in Unalakleet. He joined his two older sisters, Iris and Anna, and was followed by two more sisters Maggie and Alice and foster brother Danny. Hoss had four children Jason, Carol, Jalene and Renée. He was a proud grandfather and cared deeply for each of his 13 grandchildren and was especially excited to meet his great granddaughter Alayna the week before he died. He died June 25.

He attended the Unalakleet Elementary School and graduated from the Covenant High School on May 23 of 1973. He attended the Wyoming Technical Institute in Laramie, Wyoming and studied Automotive Mechanics. Harold worked for the City of Unalakleet as the Water Plant Operator for several years and most recently worked for the Unalakleet Native Corporation in Building Maintenance. He was what they call a "Jack of All Trades!" He was a skilled boiler mechanic and was a phone call away to anyone who needed his services. Many times he did not charge people for his work and would not hesitate when elders and children were in a home that needed heat.

Hoss loved the outdoors, boating, commercial fishing, truck rides, icecream with his grandkids and he always had a pot of coffee ready to drink with friends and visitors. He really enjoyed the view from his beachfront home. He watched the birds, sea mammals, fish and wildlife as the view changed with the seasons. He was knowledgeable about many things and was the one that we turned to for advice. He loved to eat a good meal and was often the last person at the dinner table. He enjoyed the treats made by his daughters during Christmas and carefully guarded Renee's homemade Almond Roca and enjoyed chocolate covered cherries. He had dreams to travel after several road trips with his daughter Jalene and granddaughter made sure his nets were clean when the tide went down and in line when the tide came up. Commercial fishing was his passion. The second week that in Anchorage, after his diagnosis, he was planning his treatments around his fishing schedule.

Every spring commercial fishing was on his mind. He would get his nets ready and during the season he

Harold was preceded in death by his father Harold Charles Sr., his wife Doreen Charles, his sister Maggie Ferry and his grandson Dwayne Johnson Jr. He is survived by his mother Frances Charles, whom he loved and cared for deeply. He was her neighbor, her provider, her only son. He is survived by his sisters, brother, children, grandchildren, great-granddaughter, many nieces, nephews, cousins and friends. His gentle demeanor and kind smile will be deeply missed by our family. He was our "go to guy" for many things. Peace to his memory.

Saying it Sincerely

Pastor Wendell Downs From the Seventh-day Adventist Church A member of the Nome Ministerial Association "Victimless" Crimes

"I'm Opposed to Enforcement of Victimless Crimes"

I read that on a campaign statement recently.

That's also what a friend of mine once told me. No matter that my friend is also opposed to most every form of modern law and order – especially taxes, but also drivers' licensing, car licensing, and many other signs that we live in an ordered society.

So I asked him, "OK, what do you mean by a "Victimless Crime"? He was specifically talking about enforcement of marijuana laws and possession of alcohol without evidence of use by certain people.

Without getting into a long argument about whether possession leads to use, or whether or not both should be criminalized, let me say that from a Christian standpoint, I accept that my body is a temple that belongs to God. I also acknowledge that keeping a temple holy demands keeping out anything which defiles, in this case impairs judgment, or could shorten life. By accepted medical standards these and many other controlled substances fall into that camp.

On a personal level I react to the claim of "victimless crime." Back in 1989 my niece, Vonnie, then just 20 years old and engaged to be married, was smashed into by a driver intoxicated well beyond the legal limit. Vonnie, a beautiful girl with long blond hair, remained conscious at the scene of the accident for about 30 minutes, then died at the hospital. The offending soused female driver suffered not a scratch, nor was she ever charged with a crime. I ask, "Is that a victimless crime?"

Possession does lead to use either by that person or by others, and many times this leads to illegal actions which affect others for life. I, for one, will never buy the statement, "It is a victimless crime." Neither will I knowingly vote for somebody who expresses those views.

I would like to send a clear message to the Alaska State Troopers and the people of Brevig Mission that our family is not giving up finding out what really happened to Waylon. There are too many unanswered questions, especially the call that was made to Waylon's parents apologizing for his death before his body was found.

I know the troopers can do more in their investigation, like tracking where that call came from. Most likely, the troopers are afraid to admit that their initial investigation was carried out hurriedly and their reasoning that it was suicide is wrong. They need to do more to find the real cause in order to help end the mental anguish their mistake has caused

Someone is being quite like they are when things happen in Brevig that should not have. I urge the Alaska State Troopers to admit their mistake and reopen their investigation and dig deeper into the real cause of Waylon's death.

Quianna, Reggie K. Barr Brevig Mission, AK 99785

Dear Editor:

We don't want this to happen to anyone else. My wife went to town (Anchorage) yesterday for her appointments and we thought every thing was in order but it was not.

Our youngest is three and was going to get her teeth looked at while Shirley was waiting for her checkup. Shirley and Lydia went to Anchorage yesterday and went to the [ANMC] hospital to the Quyana House just to find out they would not let her stay their because she had our three-year-old. We live in a small Village and don't know if hospitals change policy or not but we found out after she was in town that they could not help. My wife survived Type A Influenza and was under forced Coma for two months and the first month we lost our oldest to a car crash while Shirley was still in hospital. Shirley, from what we were told, lost most of her lung tissue and her cough was getting worse and had appointments but did not make because of weather or some thing important would come up but she made it into town and had nowhere to stay but luckily last night she was able to contact one of my cousins so she and my daughter had a place to stay last night

The hospital should be able to make exceptions for people who do not know if information has changed. My wife told them she did not know about their rules because it was not like that before because I guess it just changed not too long ago.

Stony River is about 250 miles west of Anchorage over the Alaska Range and it is hard to get into town and we had to pay our own way the hospital they should have tried to help or put her up in a hotel or some thing but they did not.

Kevin and Shirley Ann Gusty Stony River, AK 99557

Implement Academy of Women Achievers Aurora Program

The Women of Achievement Mentorship Program connects YWCA Alaska's Academy of Women Achievers to the community through offering the insight, skills and wisdom of Women of Achievement in a mentorship program.

Expand Girl's Circle into Rural Alaska

YWCA Alaska's Youth Empowerment Circles into Rural Alaska where the needs are great, and unique. Expansion of our Girl's Circles will help young women address challenges affecting their long-term self-worth - issues like physical and emotional abuse - or worse yet, human trafficking. These young women can share their personal strengths and gain the skills necessary to build self-confidence and make healthy choices.

Increase Economic Justice Project Clients by 25%

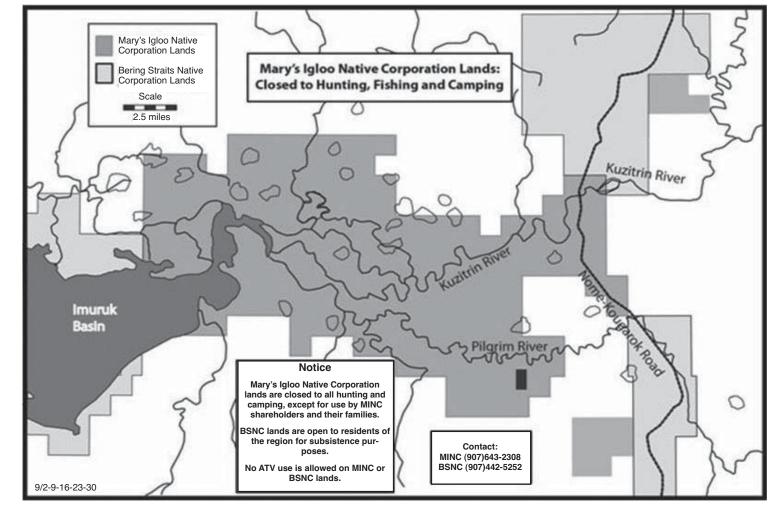

Our Economic Justice Project will increase access to financial and career building skills for disadvantaged individuals by partnering with organizations and agencies to identify high-risk clients and provide them with the economic training, money management skills and a financial management skills to establish healthy money relationships therefore, getting these women back on their feet.

Create Women's Wellness

Outreach Toolkit

Alaska has one of the highest rates of breast cancer mortality per capita in the Nation. Kodiak has the highest rate of Stage 4 breast cancer detection in the state. Our goal is to provide an Outreach Toolkit to rural Alaska, which will provide education on early detection to bring earlier and better treatment options, therefore, saving lives.

Parnell concedes Governor's race

By Diana Haecker

On Saturday evening, Nov. 15, Governor Sean Parnell sent a message on Facebook conceding the governor's race to Bill Walker. The Division of Elections had resumed counting 48,000 outstanding ballots and results posted on Friday showed that independent candidate Bill Walker had the lead. Walker and running mate Democrat Byron Mallot had 129,097 or 47.86 percent of the vote, Parnell and running mate Anchorage Mayor Dan Sullivan garnered 124,463 votes (46.14 percent).

Parnell began his Facebook post saying, "It has been an honor to serve as Governor of Alaska for more than five years." He wrote that, after Friday's vote counting, it became clear that, while a win for the Parnell-Sullivan ticket was numerically possible, it was highly improbable.

Parnell said that because the swearing-in date for governor-elect is December 1 and in the event the count percentages held, he deemed it in the best interest of Alaskans to begin coordinating transition activities now with the Walker-Mallott ticket. Parnell met with Walker on Saturday morning and pledged an orderly transition.

Bill Walker has not yet claimed victory, but confirmed in a press release that he met with Governor Parnell on Saturday morning. "We recognized the dedicated effort of our respective campaigns and expressed tremendous gratitude for our families and volunteers. This evening, Governor Parnell graciously conceded the race in order to facilitate a smooth and efficient transition process," Walker wrote. Lt. Governor-elect Byron Mallott added he was grateful to Governor Parnell and Mayor Sullivan for allowing the transition process to proceed. "Bill and I have a lot of work ahead of us. The graceful gesture of the Parnell Sullivan team signals to all Alaskans that it is time to rise together and work as one toward a vibrant and productive future for our state."

On Nov. 12, Walker announced steps taken toward the organization of a transition team. The co-chairs are Ana Hoffman of Bethel and Rick Halford of Chugiak. Hoffman graduated from Stanford University and the University of Alaska, Fairbanks. She is the president and CEO of the Bethel Native Corporation, co-chair of the Alaska Federation of Natives and serves on the Alaska Native Village CEO's Association Board. Halford lives in Chugiak and Aleknakik. He served in the Alaska legislature for over 20 years, with multiple terms as Senate President and Senate Majority leader. Halford is a for-Republican mer National Committeeman for Alaska (2000-2004).

The transition team co-chairs announced topics that will be dealt with by subcommittee members yet to be named.

First on the list is economic development followed by infrastructure. The third item on the list is subsistence. These categories will become subcommittees within the

On Monday, the Alaska State Senate Majority congratulated Governor-elect Bill Walker and Lt. Governor-Elect Byron Mallott on their victory in the race for Alaska's top two administrative seats.

Incoming Senate President Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage said he is looking forward to working with the administration on issues that are vital to Alaskans and the future of our state. "Alaska has immense potential, from the bounty of our resources to the industriousness of our people. Working together, we can achieve that potential, creating opportunities for Alaskans and setting our state on a course that will secure our future," Meyer said. The 29th Legislature convenes on January 20, 2015.

"It is my fervent hope that Alaska's trajectory for economic growth and individual safety and opportunity will be maintained," Parnell wrote.

'We respect the will of the voters, and offer Bill Walker, Byron Mallott and their families our sincere congratulations.'

Begich congratulates Sullivan

ANCHORAGE - On Monday, November 17, U.S. Senator Mark Begich released the following statement on the result of Alaska's U.S. Senate election after calling to congratulate Dan Sulli-

"Alaska is a place unmatched by any other, and the opportunity to represent Alaskans and all of Alaska's communities in the U.S. Senate has been a tremendous honor for which I am eternally grateful. Alaska deserves a bright future with expanded economic opportunity, equality for all Alaskans under the law, and a strong and prosperous rural Alaska. As a born and raised Alaskan, I will always be involved in my community, and the results of an election have never diminished my desire or passion to achieve these goals.

"I'm proud of the work my team and I accomplished to open the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska to development, to move forward Arctic oil exploration, and to protect Alaska's postal service. Saving the F-16's in Fairbanks, protecting missile defense at Fort Greely, and securing two new squadrons of F-35's for Eielson Air Force Base will spur the largest economic investment in Interior Alaska since the construction of TAPS.

"I consider one of my most significant accomplishments to be the new national model of caring for our veterans, allowing the men and women who served our nation to receive health care at local health clinics and hospitals without traveling to VA facilities. This accomplishment proves that Alaska is a place of unbelievable possibilities and that we never shy away from a challenge.

"During this campaign, I put my record of delivering for Alaska front and center, and it's why this election was one of the closest races in the country despite over ten million dollars of attacks from Outside groups and their partisan narrative. These accomplishments are not red or blue results, they're Alaska results, and the final margin of this election and the clear support I received from independent voters affirms that.

"When I spoke with Dan Sullivan today, I encouraged him to adopt a bipartisan resolve in the Senate. Alaska is ill-served by the partisan fights that don't reflect our state's unique needs and priorities.

"Rural Alaska made its voice heard loud and clear in the election, and I am overwhelmed by the record levels of support I received from villages and hubs across the state. It has been an honor to travel Alaska to meet with Alaskans in their homes, tribal halls and businesses to hear their needs and concerns. Being born and raised in Anchorage, I'm also proud to have won ten of Anchorage's 16 legislative districts, a testament to my past and present service to my community."

Last election results as of Friday, Nov. 14, showed that Mark Begich had 123,657 votes (45.47 percent) and Republican Dan Sullivan garnered 131,375 votes (48.31 percent).

volunteers will be sent into.

Powelson described the procedure for setting off the explosions. Guards will secure the area and check that nobody is in the vicinity of the blasting. Explosion professionals will drill holes 40 feet into the ground, bury the explosives and cap the hole with overburden and gravel. Five minutes prior to the explosion, a horn will be sounded.

The same will be done one minute before the blast.

Powelson said he expects only one explosion to occur per morning. Asked about the noise level, he described the sound. "It will be more like a dull thump than a loud crash," he said. He doesn't expect the explosions to affect the area's water table or any water wells. The closest residents live at Lester Bench and at the FAA housing.

Powelson said the same kind of blasting was conducted by the Alaska Gold Co. in the same area in

The press release from Nome Gold Alaska states that the company has 43 employees working at their placer operations.

Out of these 43 workers, 18 are from Nome and 16 are from across the state.

Nome sees four days of record warmth

By Diana Haecker

After a somewhat normal start, Nome's November temperatures, temperatures soared to unseasonal warmth, which melted snow and left roadways icy and coated with a thin layer of standing water.

The remnants of super typhoon Nuri brought warm air to the region. Jerry Steiger, meteorologist-incharge at the Nome post of the National Weather Service, said on Thursday, November 13, a measured temperature of 40°F in Nome tied a previously set record in 1976. It broke the highest minimum temperature of 34°F by one degree: 35 de-

The following day, Nome broke the record high set in 1976 (37°F) when the mercury rose to 39°F. The next day, temperatures rose even higher. On Nov. 15, it reached 43°F, besting the record set at 39°F in 1907. On Sunday, Nov. 16, the thermometer rose to 41°F, breaking the record of 36°F set in the year 2000. On Tuesday, Nome broke the record set in 1977 (35°F) with a temperature of 43°F. High temperature norms for November generally hover around the 20°F mark. "We are about 10°F warmer than normal," Steiger said.

He pointed out the unusual occurrence of clear and sunny skies. At this time of year, clear weather in these latitudes usually coincide with cold temperatures. Steiger expects temperatures to slowly cool down.

Nome and the immediate surroundings show only small remnants of snow on the ground. Steiger said the normal for this time of the year snow accumulated from July until now – should be 11.4 inches.

However, this fall, Nome experienced only two snow events totaling 6.4 inches. "It is definitely unusual that we break three records in a row," said Steiger.

NJUS signs union agreement, shortens manager contract

By Sandra L. Medearis

NJUS has concluded negotiations on labor contracts effective retroactively to Jan. 1, 2014.

Alaska Public Employees Assn., IBEW Local 1547 electrical workers and International Operating Engineers Local 302 NJUS employees will be getting a two percent raise each of the next three years until the end of 2016.

The utility was able to hold the raises to a "reasonable percentage" even though the cost of living had increased more than two percent, NJUS manager John K. Handeland told the board.

The unions were willing to settle for two percent rather than drag out negotiations further for higher amounts, Handeland said.

The NJUS Board of Directors approved the contracts unanimously. Historically the raises have been three percent.

NJUS is currently working through a cash flow crisis and has taken a $2.2 million line of credit from City of Nome.

In a demonstration of laissez-faire management, the NJUS board of directors at its recent regular meeting last week, also renewed a Handeland's employment agreement that lapsed in 2013.

Renewal in 2014 was overlooked. Handeland's contract terms will remain the same, but the term will be shorter.

Historically the manager's contact has covered two years.

"Based on the current situation and my feeling that the utility would be still served by my services, but that with our current state of affairs with a shorter term of agreement initially, rather than asking for extension of it in a two-year agreement, my proposal was to continue to June 30 with 'ongoing satisfactory performance must be demonstrated, a specific task list being accomplished', that the board actually perform a formal review at the beginning of April to determine at that point whether the contract will extend beyond June 30 By the board's discretion they may perform a review at any time prior to that," Handeland said. "If it is determined not to extend the agreement, the utility would begin recruiting for a manager and, I hope, would have that accomplished within 45 days and then I would continue to be available for another 45 days during the transition.

"In connection with this, my wages would not be adjusted. There was no adjustment in 2014, nor will

Team updates regional salmon plan

Panel votes to exclude Nome Fishermen's Association from ex-officio membership

By Diana Haecker

The Regional Planning Team met in Nome last Friday to continue work on updating the 1996 regional comprehensive salmon plan.

This process has been in the works for several years and is scheduled to be in its final stages sometime next summer.

A final product would be a comprehensive salmon plan for the Norton Sound/Bering Strait region that reflects the needs and desires of salmon users in the area, said Sam Rabung, Hatchery Program Coordinator with the Division of Commercial Fisheries at the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game.

Rabung is the chairman of the six voting member Regional Planning Team, RPT for short. Three members are from ADF&G, namely John Linderman, Brendan Scanlon and Ron Josephson — who was not present. The remaining three members are representatives of the Northern Bering Sea Regional Aquaculture Association, NoBSRAA for short, and they are Charlie Lean, Oscar Takak and Tom Gray.

Non-voting, ex-officio members are Kawerak Inc., represented by Roy Ashenfelter and the Nome Fishermen's Association represented by Tim Smith.

Toward the end of the meeting, the RPT entertained a motion made by Charlie Lean to remove the Nome Fishermen's Association as an ex-officio member from the panel. The motion passed unanimously and will be forwarded to the ADF&G commissioner who will make the call whether or not to exclude the Nome Fishermen's Association, NFA for short, from the RPT.

Sam Rabung explained in an email to the Nome Nugget the reasons for the removal. He wrote that

ADF&G investigates black lesions found on tomcod

By Justin Leon, ADF&G

The Nome office of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game received several reports of tomcod with black lesions this year.

To date there have been seven reports of infected fish from as close as Snake River to as far as Serpentine River on the north side of Seward Peninsula.

A few reports of this nature have occurred throughout the years.

At the request of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game's pathology lab, recent samples of tomcod with these lesions were sent off to an Anchorage lab for analysis.

ADF&G fishery biologists speculate that the lesions are a fungus growing on tomcod. Specifically, black mold, commonly found in houses, has been detected in previously analyzed samples.

What the pathology lab finds interesting is that this fungus is land-based and yet it is appearing on fish. Affected fish have black lesions, typically in the midsection, that are raised above the skin. Fish pathologists would like to receive as many samples as possible so that they may adequately research what exactly is infecting these fish, as well as its affect on humans.

Until further notice, ADF&G recommends that fish with lesions should not be eaten due to possible human health concerns.

If you catch any tomcod that match the above description, do not freeze them but please drop them off at the Alaska Department of Fish and 5th Street and Bering Street across from the Old Hospital or call (907) 443-5167 with any questions

DON'T EAT THIS—ADF&G biologists are investigating black lesions found on tomcods in the region. Until it is known what the lesions exactly are, the department recommends not to consume fish showing these symptoms

Letters —

Dear Editor:

I read in the Alaska Dispatch that the Nome City Council agreed to move forward with a draft ordinance removing sales tax exemptions from nonprofits and churches. It is believed this would add an additional $300,000.

I was born and raised in Nome but left when I was in my teens. After 50 years absence, I went back with Alaska Missions several years ago during the Iditarod. We were housed at the Nome Baptist church.

In only one week, here are the activities I participated in. At least 20 volunteers worked in the all-day concession stand the week of the basketball tournament at the Rec Center. The missions team bought all the food except the reindeer hotdogs; ALL proceeds went to the local charities including the women's shelter. Another team of volunteers came at 11p.m. to clean the gym, bleachers, locker rooms and kitchen which took several hours. I also participated in bringing totes filled with blankets, toiletry items, socks, etc to the homeless shelter at the Nazarene Church which opened at 9 p.m. so the homeless could have a place to sleep and would not freeze. They were provided a hot meal. It was staffed by local volunteers. I wonder what it would cost for Nome to build and staff a homeless shelter? We also volunteered at the Children's Home, Women's Shelter, prison and all aspects of the Iditarod; safety patrols, sales, answered phones and provided dog lot security. Iditarod mushers also stayed at the church.

Churches are not only used for community events and meetings, but serve as voting precincts, places for fellowship, counseling and memorials. Believe it or not, we are made up of body, soul and spirit. The churches are there for our soul and spirit and teach us about God and the hope we have through his son Jesus; to be giving, forgiving, and to care for our fellow man. Do you honestly believe the additional sales tax money can balance the contributions the various churches make to the community all year long? Churches will never stop doing what they can do for their community, but your taking away the maximum benefit they can do.

The Big Umbrella

Nome Joint Utilities has drawn criticism for its financial situation. As a result it has been fiscally prudent for the City of Nome to put NJU under its protective accounting umbrella.

Let's not visualize Whinny the Pooh with a windblown, inside-out parasol or a gigantic circus tent. Let's also drop all past discussions and distrust from ancient City/NJU bad blood— that's history and Nomeites with long memories need to get over it. It makes economic and administrative sense to have the City and NJU under the same financial control. None Joint Utilities is no longer the old flash and flicker it was in the 1970s. It has a larger city, road system outreach, wind generation, Pilgrim potential, and city sewer and water systems. It can no longer have one guy spread too thin to keep tabs on everything and be everything to everyone.

NJU and the City should work together and recognize that it is time to join forces; after all, they are both employed by the citizens of Nome. The have a common mission—to serve the public.—N.L.M.—

Time for Alaska to Rise as One

By Bill Walker and Byron Mallott

Across Alaska, front yards, car bumpers and jacket lapels are shedding campaign signs, stickers and pins. Air waves, newspapers and social media are focusing again on other aspects of our diverse but connected lives. The heated partisan rhetoric and rancorous debate that dominated these long months should now truly end. The theme, "Rise As One," of the Alaska Federation of Natives annual convention held this year in Anchorage is a fitting aspiration for all Alaskans. It is time for Alaskans to rise as one.

In the days after the election, we sat down with a team of Alaska leaders to begin a process of reaching out to all Alaskans for advice and guidance. As a result, we have assembled a transition team from across the state representing a broad range of perspectives, experiences and beliefs who collectively will help us begin to address the critical challenges and opportunities ahead of us.

This transition of state government is particularly critical as — for the first time in state history — Alaska will have a nonpartisan, independent administration. This transition team will help create a roadmap of policy objectives and goals for the Walker/Mallott administration. This transition is the first step in following through with our campaign pledge to reach out and listen to Alaskans. It is the first step in prioritizing our campaign promises to accept Medicaid expansion, address the high cost of energy, immediately begin to responsibly reduce state spending and continue to sustain Constitutional obligations for education, public safety, health and justice. The transition team meeting in Anchorage through this coming weekend will be the first step in reaching out to Alaskans so together we can address tough issues like subsistence, fish and game management policy, state, local and tribal relations, climate change and arctic policy and the relationship between our state and the federal government.

It is critical to us that we address all sides of the many opportunities and challenges at hand during this transition process. We firmly believe more voices leads to more ideas and ultimately better solutions for the state. We will strive to seek common ground on historically divisive issues that have divided Alaskans. We will look for ways to strengthen the presence of your state government across Alaska and the delivery of state services and management of programs. We hope to find common ground as we explore new challenges in Arctic policy and revitalization of the Army National Guard in rural Alaska. Alaska needs a clear path forward and the opportunity for every voice to be heard is important to the success we seek. We will work side by side with the transition team to listen, to learn and to gain the knowledge and inspiration we will need in the days ahead.

This state is founded upon the notions of hard work, collaboration and a shared vision — not partisanship or angry lines in the sand. Initials demarcating party affiliation will not be tripwires for us when making appointments. We look forward to returning to the best kind of Alaska state government with Democrats, Republicans, independents and nonpartisans working side by side for the good of the state. We continue to say this because we have all seen Alaska's interests neglected when partisan stalemates in Alaska's capital have prevented or slowed greatly needed progress. The journey ahead of us is long but the steps along it we take together as Alaskans can lead us to a future that meets our fiscal needs, grows our economy and gives hope and opportunity for achievement of our aspirations. Alaska is a unique and inspirational land of incredible richness, vast distances and many cultures. We have achieved much as Alaskans during these first 50-plus years of statehood. We have much left to do and both the opportunities and challenges are

There are those of us who remember the day in 1959 when the eight stars on the Alaska flag became the 49th star on the American flag. There are those of us who have been born here and many who have come from other places since. We are all Alaskans. The Great Seal of the United States reminds us: E Pluribus Unum — "Out of many, one." And as our campaign, called by so many, the Unity Ticket, constantly harkened to — "Alaska First, It's Time." Beyond the transition, we will invite and will reach out to Alaskans, everyone and in every place, so we can come together and make Alaska first.

Bill Walker and Byron Mallott are the governor-elect and lieutenant-governor-elect, respectively, of Alaska.

Regional members appointed to Walker/ Mallott Transition Team

Governor-elect Bill Walker and Lt. Gov-elect Byron Mallott released the complete list of names of Alaskans participating in the Transition Team conference.

Walker/Mallott have named Ben Esch and Loretta Bullard as transition team members. Esch has been named to Corrections transition and Bullard to Public Safety. Vera Metcalf of Savoonga and Nome is on the Arctic Policy and Climate Change team.

Kotzebue has Polly Schaeffer on the Education team, Marie Greene on Natural Resources and both Walter

Alaska Arctic Policy Commission prepares final report to Alaska Legislature

The Alaska Arctic Policy Commission is completing an 18-month effort to articulate a vision for advancing the state's economic and resource development, communities, environmental health and cultures. The AAPC includes 10 members of the Alaska Legislature and 16 representatives of federal and state agencies, local governments, University of Alaska, Alaska Native corporations, Alaska industries, conservation groups and international Arctic organizations.

On Jan. 30, 2015 the commission will present to the Alaska Legislature a final report that includes: (1) A review of economic, social, cultural and environmental factors relevant to the Arctic and all Alaskans: (2) a draft Alaska Arctic Policy that reflects Alaskans' values and guides future decision making; and (3) an implementation plan with recommendations for legislative consideration in four strategic areas.

The AAPC held its final scheduled meeting Nov. 17-18 in Anchorage to refine and clarify statements in the draft report overview as well as specific recommendations in the implementation plan and other sections of the report. Fran Ulmer, chair of the U.S. Arctic Research Commission, and Alaska Lt. Gov. Mead Treadwell participated in the discussion at the invitation of the commis-

The commission also discussed a working draft of a Senate bill titled, "An Act declaring the Arctic policy of the state" to be introduced next year in the 29th legislature.

Several commissioners made suggestions to strengthen the narrative tone of the report and to make its recommendations more pointed.

Among proposed changes in the report's overview section are the following:

- Add a statement about devolution-the transfer or delegation of power from the federal government to the State of Alaska.
- Clearly state that permafrost melt is threatening a lot of infrastructure in Alaska.
- Note that local communities have done a lot to lead energy solutions in rural Alaska.
- Include a reference to suicide and the pervasive effects of alcohol abuse in Alaska. • Add a whole section on shipping in
- the Arctic. • In relation to climate change, note that other people around the world want Alaska penalized by locking it
- up. • Comment on the importance of trade and investment.
- · Add information about the price of doing nothing.

• Mention revenue sharing throughout the report.

Implementation plan reviewed

Commission members reviewed the working draft of the report's implementation plan and flagged several recommendations for discussion and revision. Recommendations appear under each of these four strategic lines of effort for the State of Alaska: (1) Promote economic and resource development; (2) address the response infrastructure gap in Alaska's Arctic; (3) support healthy communities; and (4) strengthen Alaska Arctic science and research. Each recommendation is accompanied by a written justification and a description of how it will get done, along with lists of the lead state agencies and partners and the resources and legislative actions reto accomplish recommendation.

Following are two examples of the implementation plan recommendations discussed by AAPC members at last week's meeting.

Recommendation 1(a): "Facilitate the development of an Arctic port in the Bering Strait region." Suggested change: "Form an Arctic port authority that links local port authorities and commissions." Rep. Bob Herron of Bethel, who co-chairs the AAPC with Sen. Lesil McGuire of Anchorage, noted that all recommendations in the plan have potential for legislative action. example, this one will be appropriate in the Labor and Commerce Committee, Finance, and it will be appropriate in State Affairs," he added. He said the commission wants to makes recommendations that give all legislators a piece of the implementation

Recommendation 1(h): "Build on and promote Alaska's position as a global leader in micro-grid deployment and operation to advance a knowledge-based export economy, creating new jobs and revenue for the state." Commissioners sought to define micro-grid and explain why Alaska is a leader in micro-grid technology. The implementation plan

IMO committee adopts Polar Code

Last Friday the Maritime Safety Committee of the International Maritime Organization adopted measures to protect people and the environment during a predicted shipping rush in the Arctic, The Guardian reports.

The committee met in London and signed off on the Polar Code and various amendments to the Safety of Life at Sea (Solas) convention. The changes include mandatory requirements for ship design, crew training and search and rescue protocols. The amendments are expected to be ratified by the full IMO next year and come into force in 2017.

However, environmental groups and insurers said the IMO had failed to address key issues including a proposed ban on heavy fuel oil and how to safeguard against cowboy operators.

Russia predicts a 30-fold increase in shipping by 2020 and an ice-free Northern Sea Route by 2050. China has suggested that by 2020, 5 to 15 percent of its trade value -close to $500 billion — could pass through the Arctic

The new Polar Code will require ships to develop a Polar Operations Manual for each voyage, which is then reviewed and approved within the flag state. Cutting corners is tempting as the costs of ice-strengthening ships and training expert ice navigators are very large. There are some flag states insurers will not work with because they are seen as reckless.

Just four ships navigated the Northern Sea Route over Russia in 2010, but by 2013 the number had reached 71. This summer saw relatively heavy ice cover in the Arctic, causing numbers to drop. But the long-term trend is toward greatly expanded shipping across the northern extremes of Russia, Canada and even straight across the North Pole.

they be adjusted in 2015 for the duration of this agreement.

The board unanimously approved the extension though June 30, 2015.

Handeland has managed the specific control of the specific sp water, sewer and electrical services section of City government for over 15 years. NJUS currently serves 2,140 to 2,150 households.

The contract spells out specific tasks to be accomplished and requires regular reporting. "These will help," Handeland said.

Currently, the board and Handeland are working to pull out of a budget crisis.

Board chair, Berda Willson, charged Handeland with putting together a plan of action to return the utility to financial health which the board will discuss at the Nov. 25 meeting

That plan, when final, must go to the City.

Cost savings and budget management dominated the agenda at two meetings last week. The group will continue to meet to get finances on track, with three sessions planned before the end of the year [Nov. 25, Dec. 2, Dec. 10].

A financial plan for recovery must go to the Nome Common Council by the first part of January. It will accompany a number of demands from the Council in extending a $2.2 million line of credit to NJUS.

The money will provide interim grant and loan anticipation funds for financing utility projects. NJUS has money coming from grants and loans provided by state and federal agencies for utility projects, but according to terms of the grants and loan packages, NJUS must hire contractors for the projects, pay for labor and supplies, then apply to the approved grant and accounts for reimbursement. NJUS must front the money and then collect. NJUS has dipped into operations money to pay project costs, but still has money owed to vendors that must be paid to get reimbursements.

Handeland told the NJUS Board of Directors at a special meeting on the 20th that he had been able to submit some requests to agencies for reimbursement. However, one major request to federal USDA for reimbursement of $1.4 million for water and sewer work had drawn a request from the agency for another week to process the funds, meaning he was waiting to meet with USDA Nov. 26. NJUS has drawn about $480,000 from the line of credit to pay for water and sewer system work in order to receive reimbursement from a state Dept. of Environmental Conservation grant. The utility has also drawn about $750,000 from the credit line to facilitate reimbursement from Alaska Energy Authority.

"The process is that we cut the checks, we have pay requests ready to go and submit those to the City for their approval and the pay requests go out the door the same day the checks go out the door," Handeland said. "We see those as rapid turnarounds and we won't be sitting on the City's money for a long period of time."

In response to a question from Board member Carl Emmons, Handeland replied that the DEC money would turn around relatively fast, becoming available in about three weeks

"It can take up to 45 days, but we definitely will work with them and I think they are ready to work with us to get things turned around much more quickly. We have a contact with each of these agencies letting them know the current obligations we have, to be able to roll these dollars on a rapid turn-around," he said.

The money from DEC, USDA and AEA will go directly to the City to reimburse it for the line draws, Handeland said, in accordance with an agreement on credit line terms signed by NJUS.

Once NJUS gets the money from DEC, we have the next $411,000 packaged and ready to revolve again, getting NJUS pretty much to the bottom of the reimbursement coming from DEC, Handeland said, with the exception of the 30 percent of the project funding tied to DEC loans that would not close in Washington D.C until next month.

NJUS was drawing on the line of credit in increments, Handeland said, to leave a buffer in front of the $2.2 million line of credit cap against unseen delays in reimbursements, Handeland said.

There must be interim financing available in coffers to meet cash flow requirements. That interim financing has not been available for several reasons—reimbursement paperwork not filed timely, power generators using more fuel than expected, and, according to John K. Handeland, utility manager, a shortage in revenues from sales of services and electrical power.

The utility recently raised water and sewer rates, but the charge for electricity has not been changed since 1995, 20 years ago.

The City is requiring NJUS to work with a rate analyst in December to determine a cost increase for electrical services.

NJUS will provide the figures; the rate analyst, due to arrive first week of December, will use these numbers to determine rate needs, Willson said

"We know the labor costs, the fuel costs and the fixed costs," she said. "Our cost structure will drive what the rates need to be," she said.

Willson demanded that Handeland produce a balance sheet that was easily understood, without chasing money from column to column.

The board agreed they could start working on the 2015 budget. They will make changes after getting the verdict on rates from the analyst. They said the budget could be a living document.

"We have a lot of work to accomplish in a short time," Handeland said, referring to the obligation to get a financial plan to the City early next

Willson said the board would increase the number of meetings and work sessions.

states:

"Since the 1960s electricity generation in the remote regions of Alaska has been heavily reliant on diesel generators, which serve numerous islanded microgrids. Over the past decade, investment in renewable generation has increased dramatically to meet both a desire for greater energy independence and reduce the cost of delivered power. The integration of variable resources (wind and PV), as well as limitations of local hydro and geothermal power has led to significant experience in the design, development and operation of these micro-grids. Today, there are over 100 small businesses, utilities, and non-profits with specialized expertise operating in Alaska, many of which are interested in applying their knowledge outside of the state. Globally, the micro-grid market is on the verge of exploding. A recent report by Navigant Research estimates the micro-grid market will grow nearly 5-fold, to an estimated $40B in revenue by 2020.

PV means photovoltaics, or solar power.

Commissioners noted that researchers at the Alaska Center for Energy and Power, University of Alaska Fairbanks are developing micro-grid technology that could be deployed not just in rural Alaska, but in Africa, South America and other places with small communities whose economies and distance from other communities will not justify transmission lines. An example of such research is a study on integrating a potential geothermal energy source at Pilgrim Hot Springs into the wind-diesel micro-grid in Nome conducted by Jeremy VanderMeer of ACEP and Dr. Marc Mueller-Stoffels

National and international interests

A two-page section of the report titled, "National and International Interests" recognizes that the AAPC shares the Arctic with others who have jurisdictional authority. "The Bering Strait, for instance, is an international waterway; the federal government controls waters outside three miles and within its Exclusive Economic Zone; and federal agencies own and manage federal lands within much of the Arctic," notes the report. "The Commission has produced a number of recommendations that speak to those issues outside its authority, as they relate directly to the health and well-being of Alaskans.'

A group of commissioners and invited participants who reviewed the recommendations agreed that they were somewhat negative and lengthier than necessary, so they attempted to revise and shorten the section. Some of the suggested changes prompted lengthy discussion by the commission as a whole, and a number of additional revisions were suggested.

AAPC report completion

The AAPC staff will integrate commission members' suggested changes in the report and submit a revised final draft to them for review and comment. Senator McGuire said she and Representative Herron will write a foreword for the document. Herron said legislators who are AAPC members will complete work on the report section titled, "Alaska's Arctic Policy." The text deadline for the final report is Jan. 15, 2015, and then the report will be designed and published.

the Norton Sound Regional Planning Team had originally three ex-officio, non-voting members, which were the Bureau of Land Management, Kawerak, Inc., and Nome Fisherman Association. In 2013, the RPT initiated a review of its ex-officio membership. As a result, at the 2013 RPT meeting the BLM was removed from ex-officio status because it is no longer the primary landowner in the region and is no longer active in fisheries projects. Rabung wrote that Kawerak, Inc., is less involved in fisheries projects than it was but demonstrated how it represents people from 20 communities throughout the region via its board of directors and natural resources committee. "NFA is no longer involved in any fisheries projects in the region and declined to demonstrate how it represents salmon users from throughout the region," Rabung wrote. "When requested by the RPT at the 2014 RPT meeting, NFA again failed to demonstrate that it represents salmon users throughout the region and so was removed from ex-officio status. Kawerak, Inc., is now the sole ex-officio member of the NS

Charlie Lean told the Nome Nugget in a follow up phone call after the meeting that the planning team never received a straight answer from Tim Smith as to whom he represents, how many members the NFA has, what kind of fishing they do and what salmon species they fish. "What is his constituency?" Lean wanted to know.

Tim Smith answered that the NFA functions as a non-profit organization with a legitimate group of people he represents. In a follow up phone call, Smith told the Nome Nugget that he does have a legitimate constituency. He said that he had been accused of many things, but not yet of not wanting to talk about the NFA. "They've always questioned the legitimacy of the NFA. It is made up of people who want to enhance salmon stocks with hatchery production," Smith countered. "All we ask for is a non-voting seat at the table." Smith added that the NFA has been an ex-officio member of the RPT since 1995.

Chairman Rabung will submit a written report with the passed motions to the ADF&G Commissioner, who will then act on the motions passed, including the removal of an ex-officio member. Rabung added that anybody, including those involved in the NFA, is welcome to submit proposals.

The better part of Friday's meeting was devoted to actual work on updating the comprehensive salmon plan.

According to a working document that was in front of the team, the mission of the comprehensive salmon plan is "to promote, through sound biological practices, activities to increase salmon production in the Norton Sound/Bering Strait region for the maximal social and economic benefits of the users consistent with the public interest"

the public interest." RPT chairman Sam Rabung told the Nome Nugget during a meeting break that the team tries to assimilate new content and organization into the new plan so that the team can come up with a rough draft to take to communities of the region for further input on the fishery needs in the region. "This plan is to assemble the goals and needs of all the users in the region as far as salmon fisheries go,' Rabung said. "Then we do a final draft that will be available for a formal public comment and review period sometime in the future." Another round of community meetings is slated for the end of February or early March.

Rabung added that the team is trying to get something in a workable format, to identify where the holes are and what additional information is needed from the users of the region. "It's important to note that the purpose of the plan is not to make projects," Rabung said. "When somebody seeks permitting for a project, a salmon hatchery for example — if there were ever a salmon hatchery permit was applied for in the region, and there hasn't - part of the process is to bring the permit to the RPT for review and recommendation to the Commissioner. We base our recommendation on how well the project meets the needs identified in the plan. The whole point of the plan is to identify what the needs and desires are to meet the needs of the fishery users in the region and use that to basically vet a proposal to how well it meets those

The plan is divided into six chapters. Chapter one addresses guiding principles and assumptions. Several assumptions were declared wrong at the meeting and were struck from the document. Chapter two addresses historic and current salmon fisheries.

The rewrite will include a paragraph on the importance of subsistence. "It's very clear to us that subsistence is the highest priority for the entire region and that will be incorporated in this plan," said Rabung. He said that during the first round of community meetings, this message was a common denominator. But the team also learned that there are differences within the region. "What was really pointed out to us was that the user needs are different in every area, every subdistrict, every village," Rabung said.

REGIONAL PLANNING TEAM— Charlie Lean, Oscar Takak, Sam Rabung, John Linderman, Tom Gray and Brendan Scanlon are members of the RPT. Tim Smith, sitting at the back table, was removed from the ex-officio membership he held as a representative of the Nome Fishermen's Association.

"Instead of trying to capture one goal for a fairly large region, we're breaking it down to the goals and needs of every subdistrict or subregion because they are unique based on whether there is any commercial fishing or primary subsistence fishing in that area, if they prefer king salmon or chum salmon, they're all unique, depending on which village you're at."

Chapter three deals with the goals, objectives and strategies of the plan. Rabung added that the department should stay out of setting goals. "We discussed goals and realized that we need to stay back from goals," he told the panel. "That's stakeholder input, that needs to come from the communities. We are reluctant to weigh in what the region's goals should be."

Chapter four outlines systems for restoration and enhancements; chapter five lists current and ongoing salmon restoration and enhancement projects and chapter six details potential new projects for restoration or enhancement.

Rabung recognized that updating the regional comprehensive salmon plan has been a long, slow process. Initially, there was no funding available from ADF&G.

Rabung said that during the first round of community meetings ADF&G had no way to travel or go to these meetings. NSEDC funded the travel for Charlie Lean and members of Kawerak who assisted with community input. Rabung said that now there is some funding available. Tom Gray urged ADF&G officials to attend those meetings. "It's an eye opener to hear the villagers' comments," Gray said.

Aware of the slow speed at which the update process is moving, Rabung said, "I know it's frustrating for some people, but it's important to know that this plan doesn't do anything by itself. The RPT has no funding and no projects. All we do is try to represent the users of the region if somebody else were to bring a project forward. We just want to make that clear this doesn't do anything by itself."

A first draft of the plan will be reviewed by the RPT in early February 2015. Then it will be taken for additional comment to Norton Sound/Bering Strait communities in late February and early March. The input will be integrated and the plan rewritten.

An updated plan will then be drafted, be made available for public review and undergo a six-week public comment period. A final plan will be submitted for final review by the RPT

Shishmaref celebrates opening of renovated NSHC clinic

On Friday, November 14, the Native Village of Shishmaref and City of Shishmaref, in partnership with Norton Sound Health Corporation, held a ribbon cutting ceremony for the renovated health clinic. It includes a 300 square foot addition which added a trauma room, third exam room, village-based counseling office, a larger dental area and new mechanical room. A new roof, new foundation and ADA compliant ramp were added to allow better patient access.

The event started at 3 p.m. with speeches from Angie Gorn, President/CEO of Norton Sound Health Corporation and June Walunga, second Vice Chair of Norton Sound Health Corporation and Board Representative from Native Village of Gambell. Karla Nayokpuk, Board Representative from Native Village of Shishmaref shared her enthusiasm about the clinic opening as did Johnson Eningowuk, Native Village of Shishmaref and Howard

Weyiouanna, City of Shishmaref. Once the ribbon was cut, community members were invited to tour their new clinic. A reception followed at the Community Hall with refreshments, cake and Eskimo dancing

The cost of the renovation totaled $1,525,000. Funding was made possible by contributions from the Denali Commission, the Rasmusson Foundation, the Mental Health Trust, the Department of Energy and Norton Sound Health Corporation. The Engineering firms of ANTHC, DOWL HKM and A/E Lead by Larsen Consulting Group consulted on the project. Norton Sound Health Corporation thanked the contractor, Paug-Vik Development Corporation, the Native Village of Shishmaref and the City of Shishmaref for their leadership and perseverence to make the new clinic a reality.

DANCING - In celebration of the renovated clinic opening, Shishmaref residents gathered to dance at the Community Hall.

Regional post offices to reduce opening hours

By Diana Haecker

The U.S. Postal Service plans to cut operating hours of 13,000 post offices and to reduce the working hours of postal employees across the Last week, USPS spokesperson Ernie Swanson told the Nome Nugget that the reduction of retail hours will affect about 160 post offices in Alaska. "Back in 2011 we looked at 3,700 post offices for possible closure," Swanson said. In order to come up with a solution to bring the Postal Service out of its dismal financial situation, officials decided to reduce retail hours and to employ Post Masters only as part time workers. Swanson said those changes have already been implemented in 100 Alaskan post offices. In the remaining 60 post offices, they will take effect after January

This news was not received well, especially in rural Alaska where residents depend on the Post Service to deliver vital medications, groceries, and mail-order merchandise.

Nome's post office will not be impacted and won't see reductions in retail hours or personnel, Swanson said.

According to a list posted by the USPS on its website, changes will effect post offices in Stebbins, Elim, Gambell, Koyuk, Savoonga, Shismaref and Teller. There, postal retail hours will be reduced from eight to six hours. In Brevig Mission, White Mountain, Wales and Shaktoolik, retail hours will remain at six hours

Governor Parnell appoints Angela Greene to Barrow Superior Court

Last week, Governor Sean Parnell appointed Angela Greene to the Barrow Superior Court. "Ms. Greene has an excellent legal background with civil and criminal experience," Parnell said. "Her passion for rural Alaska will make her a great asset to the bench and the community of Barrow."

Greene will replace long-time Barrow Judge Michael Jeffery, who is going to retire soon. He was appointed as Barrow's first Superior Court judge in 1982 by Governor Jay Hammond.

There were four applicants for the Judge's position. After a public hearing in Barrow on October 2, the Alaska Judicial Council named Greene, Eric Smith and Nelson Traverso as the most qualified applicants. The names were forwarded to the Governor, who last week picked Angela Greene to fill the Barrow Superior Court vacancy.

Greene lives in Nome and currently is the supervising public defender for the Alaska Public Defender Agency for Nome and Kotzebue. According to her biographical statement, she came to Alaska in 2004 to pursue cross cultural studies and her law practice. Greene previously worked as a public defender in Bethel and Barrow. She is a member of the Alaska Bar Association, CINA Court Improvement Project and Indian Child Welfare Act subcommittee. She previously volunteered with the Lion's Club in Bethel, Arctic Outreach Programs with the U.S. Coast Guard, and local food bank programs.

Greene received a bachelor's degree from Florida International University and a juris doctorate from Cleveland-Marshall College of Law.

Governor-elect appoints Revenue and Natural Resources commissioners

Last week Governor-elect Bill Walker announced several appointments to his administration. Walker named Jim Whitaker of Fairbanks as his Chief of Staff. "I have known Jim for many years and regard him as a trusted advisor," Walker said. "His previous experience as mayor of the Fairbanks North Star Borough, Alaska state legislator, and Fairbanks businessman will serve my administration well."

On Saturday, Walker announced on that he had chosen Randall Hoffbeck as the Department of Revenue Commissioner. Hoffbeck served as the North Slope Borough's chief financial officer from 2006 -2011 and as Mayor Charlotte Brower's chief of staff in 2012. Hoffbeck brings 30 years of tax administration experience to the position, including his time as the petroleum property assessor for the state from 2001-term medical mission. He received his master of divinity degree in October.

Walker selected Mark D. Myers to serve as Department of Natural Resources Commissioner. For the past four years, Myers worked as the vice chancellor of research at the University of Alaska Fairbanks, where he oversees administration for UAF's research enterprise and supervises the university's many research institutes including the Geophysical Institute, the International Arctic Research Center and the Institute of Arctic Biology. Myers also has extensive leadership experience on both the federal and state levels. In 2006, he was appointed by President George W. Bush as the national director of the U.S. Geologic Survey, where he served until 2009. From 2009-2010, he served as Alaska's first Natural Gas Inducement Act Coordinator. He also led the Alaska division of oil and gas from 2001-2005 and was the state geologist and director of the division of geological and geophysical surveys in 2005.

Walker appointed Grace Jang as his spokesperson. Jang most recently worked as an investigative reporter and executive producer at KTUU Channel 2 in Anchorage. Prior to joining KTUU, Jang was an award-winning reporter with CBS 11 News/KTVA in Anchorage as well as other stations and publications in the Lower 48. She is a past vice president of the Korean American Journalists Association and is a current volunteer with Big Brothers Big Sisters of Alaska.

Governor-elect Walker will be sworn into office Monday, December 1st at 11:30 a.m. at Centennial Hall in Juneau.

Governor Sean Parnell reappointed Donna Erickson of Unalakleet to the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault. The council provides planning and coordination of services to victims of domestic violence and sexual assault and their families.

Erickson is a village agent for Bering Air, Inc. She served on the Bering Sea Women's Group Board of Directors for two terms and was a safe home provider for 25 years. PBS documented Donna's personal life story of abuse and healing in a special documentary that aired nationally, entitled, "The Burden of Silence." Erickson is a board member Unalakleet Evangelical Covenant Church, former group leader for Family Wellness Warriors, past member of InterAct Ministries of Alaska Policy Council, past parent member for RuralCAP Headstart Program Child Development Policy, and former member of the Advisory Education Committee for the Bering Straits School District. She is reappointed as a representative from a rural community of 7,500 or fewer residents, not connected by road or rail to Anchorage or Fairbanks.

Governor Parnell reappointed Thomas Vaden of Nome to the Alaska State Emergency Response Commission. The commission facilitates the preparation and implementation of all emergency plans prepared by state agencies, as well as the statewide, inter-jurisdictional, and local plans prepared under state law; designates boundaries of emergency planning districts; and establishes local planning committees for each district.

Vaden has worked as a health aide trainer for the Norton Sound Health Corporation since 1999. From 1985 to 1999, he worked as a correctional officer with the State of Alaska. Active in his community, Vaden has also been an adjunct faculty member at the University of Alaska Fairbanks, a substitute teacher for the Nome School District, a CPR instructor and trainer for Norton Sound Regional Hospital, and an emergency medical services provider for the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Service. He has served as a captain in the U.S. Army. Vaden received a bachelor's degree in elementary education from Ouachita Baptist University. He is reappointed to a seat reserved for a member of a local emergency planning committee.

Nanook Wrestlers have strong pre-conference tourney tune-up at Lancer Smith

By Keith Conger

"This is the toughest tournament of the year," stated Nome-Beltz Nanooks wrestling coach Dudley Homelvig. His team finished in eighth place out of 30 teams at the Lancer Smith wrestling tournament in Palmer last weekend. The competition at the Lancer Smith meet was mainly 4A and 3A schools, with a few squads representing the 1A and 2A divisions.

"The 145 pound class alone had four former state champions in it," said Homelvig. Nome's Emery Booshu, one of the four former champs wrestling at that classification, raised his season record to 27-0 by claiming first place in the division. Booshu's first three matches were all falls, pinning his opponents in 15 seconds, 1 minute 34 seconds, and 25 seconds.

Former state champion Paul Steffansen of Kenai Central was supposed to be Booshu's opponent in the semifinal round, but he was forced to forfeit. For the second week in a row, Booshu met up with former 4A state champion Rami Pellumbi of South Anchorage in a championship match. Homelvig explained that while Booshu beat Pellumbi 3-1 in a tough match at the Chugiak meet a week ago, he dominated the South Anchorage wrestler 8-3 this weekend. Booshu did not meet up with former state champion Gary Eakin of Kotzebue, who ended up third at the Lancer meet.

Leif Erikson, Nome's second defending state champion, continued his winning ways by taking first place in the 138 pound division. Erikson beat five straight 4A wrestlers as he raised his season record to 26-1. Like his teammate Booshu, Erikson found the same 4A

South Anchorage opponent in the championship match for the second week in a row. And like his teammate, Erikson went from a close match one weekend to a dominating win the following week, beating Noah Ottum in a 10-4 decision.

Nome's Gabe Smith raised his season record to 22-8, by winning three consolation matches. Smith had the tough task of wrestling in the 145-pound division, but was still able to come away with pins against Britnee Mills of Noatak, and Gavin Hannasch of Wasilla. He beat Dustin Holta of Chugiak in the fourth consolation round before being pinned by Eakin. Smith ended up one spot away from placing in the top six.

In the 152-pound classification, Nome's James Horner raised his record on the season to 14-9. He too was one spot away from placing. Horner won by a fall over Nicholas Gross of Wasilla in the consolation rounds before being eliminated by Bailey Blumentritt of Soldotna in a 9-1 decision.

Four other Nanooks wrestlers with 20 or more matches this season have winning records. Jason Gilder, wrestling at 138 pounds, stands at 12-8, while Oliver Hoogendorn, wrestling at the 182 pound classification has a 13-9 record. Nolan Horner has gone 12-10 wrestling in the 195-pound division.

Josh Gologergen, who had been rehabbing a broken leg, rejoined the team this weekend. Gologergen wrestled in the 170pound class and beat Wasilla's Elijah Hall in a 9 -7 decision.

"This is the end of 'practice' matches. From now on they count," said Homelvig in recognition of the end of the regular season. In two weeks, his wrestlers will head to Kotzebue for the Northern Conference Championships. Kotzebue is the defending regional wrestling champion and 2013 runners up at state. The Kotzebue team showed where they stand in the Alaska wrestling world by taking first place at the Lancer Smith meet, beating all 4A squads.

Homelvig says each team may enter three wrestlers per weight class at the conference meet. This puts his smaller squad at somewhat of a disadvantage compared to the larger teams from Kotzebue and Barrow. The Nanooks will be able to enter the maximum number of wrestlers in the 145 pound and 152 pound divisions. The team does not have any wrestlers at the 98, 106, 113, 120, or heavyweight classifications

The champion and runner up from each weight class at the Western Conference Championships will earn berths in the state tournament. At the 2013 conference meet, Barrow placed second behind Kotzebue. Nome took third place.

Nome runners test themselves around the country

By Keith Conger Rosa Schmidt

At the midpoint of the 2014 running season, Nome-Beltz graduate Rosa Schmidt, 18, was ranked number six on her Northwest Christian University Beacons cross country running team. The Beacons ranked fourth in the nation, according to the NAIA coaches' poll. Schmidt and her team mates were setting their goals high for the big end-of-season meets.

The Beacons achieved a main objective by winning their first Cascade Collegiate Conference championship in Portland, Oregon in early November. Schmidt helped her team's cause by running the five-kilometer race in a time of 18 minutes, 32 seconds, a personal best by a whopping 30 seconds. This effort landed her a tenth place finish. By situating herself in the top 12, Schmidt was named to the All-CCC team. Her performance at the conference meet moved her up to a number four ranking on her squad.

According to a report on the school's website, Beacons' coach Heike McNeil was quoted as saying, "We've always known we had a good racer in Rosa. We knew she would be the go-to person with a few others getting sick, but she gained some confidence at our time trial and just broke loose today. We knew she had it in her and it was awesome to see."

The Beacons' strong showing at the conference meet earned them an automatic bid to the NAIA national championships in Lawrence, Kansas last weekend. There, the team placed third out of 38 schools. It was best finish in the history of the NCU women's cross country running program. Schmidt held her number four ranking on the team as she finished the NAIA national championship in 71st place out of 336 runners. Her time in the race was 19:09. Schmidt was the sixth freshman to cross the line.

Jeff Collins

Jeff Collins, 34, who is part of the Nome-Beltz cross country running coaching team, competed in the Southern Fried Half Marathon on the Outer Banks of North Carolina on November 9. Collins placed 32nd overall out of 2500 runners. On a course that went through the Wright Brothers National Memorial, he posted a time of 1 hour, 31 minutes, 54 seconds, averaging 6 minutes, 58 seconds per mile. This effort placed Collins fifth in his division.

Collins has a rich history as a cross country runner, having twice raced in the NAIA championships marathon, and once qualified for the United States National Championships marathon. In 2000, Collins hit a qualifying time for the Olympic Trials. He later ran professionally for Brooks.

Collins, who is also an assistant on Nome's cross-country ski team, is using his fall running races to get in shape for the ski season. Last year Collins placed second in his age group in the 25-kilometer race at the Tour of Anchorage. He hopes to place first in 2015. Collins' main future running goal is to attend the 2015 US Mountain Running Championships in Bend, Oregon.

Crystal Tobuk

Last month Crystal Tobuk, a Nome-Beltz grad who now helps coach her alma mater's high school cross country team, came one step closer to realizing her dream of running a marathon in each of America's 50 states. Tobuk, 32, completed the 26.2 mile course at the Rock and Roll Marathon in Saint Louis, Missouri in 3 hours, 51 minutes, 17 seconds. She stated she finished 219 overall out of 1207 runners, and was eighth out of 94 in her female age category.

By competing at the Rock and Roll Marathon in Missouri, Tobuk has run marathons in six states. She doesn't really have a set plan for which states to run, but rather chooses available races that fit into her work schedule. Getting to know the new places she travels to is an added benefit. "When I'm there," says Tobuk, "I learn as much as I can." In Saint Louis, Tobuk could see the Gateway Arch during the

Extensions and ASCA achieve Highest Performing Schools status

By Keith Conger

Extensions Correspondence School and the Anvil City Science Academy have been honored as Highest Performing Reward Schools by the Alaska Department of Education and Early Development, according to the department's newsletter. The two Nome schools join a group of 53 similarly honored schools around the state. The designation is part of Alaska's school accountability system, which identifies high performing schools as well as those that are in need of support.

To gain highest performing status, a school must have met its goal for increasing the percentage of proficient students in reading, writing, and math over the past two years. It must have met certain attendance benchmarks. The school must also be in the top 10 percent of schools with similar student demographics based on a score it received under the Alaska School Performance Index. The Alaska School Performance Index measures schools using a combination of data including achievement scores on Alaska's reading, writing, and math assessments. It considers the growth of the student scores on these tests from the prior year as well.

Extensions Correspondence School has been associated with Nome Public Schools for 10 years. The program allows families to create their own learning opportunities, choosing from both school and home settings. Families can use approved Nome Public School curriculum to form a student learning plan they coordinate with a certified advisory teacher. Sixteen students of all ages are currently enrolled in the Extensions Correspondence School.

Anvil City Science Academy is a charter school in its 17th year of operation. The original school started with 20 students and strived to set up a learning environment that met the needs of students whose learning styles were not being met in the regular classroom. The school uses cross-curricular projects to promote self-discovery. In 2014 a fourth teacher was added so that the school could accommodate 60 fifth through eighth grade students.

In October the Alaska Department of Education and Early Development recognized an initial 41

Performing Highest Reward Schools. Extensions and ACSA joined the group in November along with the Dot Lake School in the Alaska Gateway School District; Bear Valley Elementary, Eagle Academy Charter School, and Northern Lights ABC K-8 School in the Anchorage School District; Dillingham Correspondence School; Sidney C. Huntington Elementary in the Galena School District; Chapman School, Kaleidoscope School of the Arts and Science, and Moose Pass School in the Kenai Peninsula School District; and Port Alexander School in the Southeast Island School District.

Beverly Frances Gelzer

Beverly Frances Gelzer was born on September 2, 1955 in Nome, and died November 14, 2014 at ANMC in Anchorage after a lengthy bout with cancer. Her parents were the late Vera Mary Joule and Warner Gelzer. Her maternal grandparents are the late Tony Joule and Annie Lieb Joule from Point Hope. Her aunts and uncles are the late Reginald Lieb Joule, Mable Blatchford, and Sylvester 'Buddy' Joule.

Beverly lived most of her life in Nome. She was raised as an only child by her parent. It wasn't until

She attended Nome Elementary and graduated from Nome-Beltz High School noting auto-mechanics was unbelievably fun. She worked at Norton Sound Health Corporation, Quyanna Care Center, Bering Sea Women's Shelter, and the State Youth Facility, to name a few. She also worked at the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum and it brought a deeper appreciation of Nome's gold rush history. She spent considerable time organizing and preserving the many old photographs there. Beverly was proud of her contribution in the preservation of old pictures from the area. That interest brought her to attend the Santa Fe School called Institute of American Indian Arts to further her skills in digitizing. If there was a question about Nome or Nome history, she usually knew the answer and more! She loved being from Nome and especially loved her

Hageland Aviation, carrier in Ravn Air Group, receives a Medallion Foundation Star for operational control

Rural carrier awarded recognition for increased safety standards in aviation industry.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (November 20, 2014) - Hageland Aviation, the rural air carrier in the Ravn Air Group, was awarded a Medallion Foundation Star for Operational Control. The Operational Control program is meant to establish an effective flight operations management system that considers all hazards and associated risks. It also requires shared decision-making for dispatching all flights with appropriate management involvement as risk levels

"This achievement is something we've been pushing toward for a while and we're proud to see that our hard work has been effective and recognized," said Hageland Aviation President Jim Hickerson.

This star is the next step in Hageland Aviation's increased safety procedures. Hageland is proactively working toward a five-star rating and the award of the Medallion Safety Shield in the Medallion Foundation safety program. The Medallion Shield program requirements exceed current FAA regulations. In order to achieve this goal, Hageland Aviation expanded their operational control center in Palmer. This facility

- Assesses every Hageland Aviation departure with a multilayered decision
- Considers weather, aircraft capabilities, pilot qualifications and runway conditions, ensuring multilayer decisions to mitigate risks.
  - Houses flight simulators for training.

Hageland Aviation also implemented a new safety reporting structure in February 2014. Hageland Aviation is operating at the highest level of safety as a Part 135 carrier. As a 135 carrier, Hageland Aviation releases an average of 150 flights per day and each release averages 3 legs, or destination stops.

The Medallion Foundation is a non-profit organization promoting aviation safety through systems enhancements by providing management resources, training and support to the aviation community. Their mission of reducing aviation accidents is fostered by research, analysis, education, auditing and advocacy of Safety Management Systems and higher flight-training standards.

results to get back to Nome. Linda Harrison, Lab Technician, guided us through the back part of the lab, explaining the technically advanced machines used to test blood and other specimens. Mrs. Harrison helped design some of the machines herself while attending a university in Ohio. The machines were for analyzing blood samples. The machines would tell what was wrong with the blood and enable the health care provider to determine a solution. One of the machines was a fully automated chemistry analyzer, which can analyze blood in minutes. It was very interesting to observe the special machines and how they work.

Something I learned that I had not known was that they have such advanced machines. The machines can analyze blood and urine samples, which helps the health care providers diagnose diseases. My favorite part of the tour was the front part of the lab, because it was the most physically interactive. The lab trip was a great opportunity for me to see the work that phlebotomists do. Now I appreciate the "diagnostic arm" of the medical field even more.

Young carver perpetuates SLI carving tradition

Robert "Utuqsiq" McCoy-Apangalook

By Diana Haecker

Eight NACTEC students from Shishmaref, Gambell, Stebbins and Brevig Mission were giddy with excitement, showing off their pieces of baleen carvings. Each student etched a message onto the black surface: Alfred Olanna an elaborate rose bud; Kenneth Rock from Brevig an abstract wolf face; Mickey Tocktoo a bowhead whale. Another etching showed a harpoon, hearts and the text "Never give up on life." The pieces of baleen art were pegged onto a moose antler with a whalebone base. The center of the three-dimensional art has an ivory carving reading "NACTEC 2014."

The students were part of a weeklong course on traditional arts, taught by a young artist whose life journey brought him back to the home of his maternal ancestors, St. Lawrence Island

Robert "Utuqsiq" McCoy-Apangalook, 25, was born and raised in Anchorage.

His mother is Barbara Joan Apangalook of St. Lawrence Island and his father is Sean McCoy.

After living in Anchorage and Wasilla for most of his life, he moved to Gambell in 2011 and learned the traditional way of life on the island.

He was guided mostly by his grandfather Leonard "Piitkaq" Apangalook Sr. "My grandpa named me "Utuqsiq" after the tallest peak on the mountain in Gambell," said McCoy. He lives up to the name, being the tallest person in the entire family, he chuckled.

During a visit to Gambell, McCoy opened his tiny plywood carving shop and talked about the trials and tribulations of his young life in Wasilla. But then he decided to learn more about his roots as St. Lawrence Island Siberian Yupik. When he came to Gambell, he gathered youth around him and began the first boxing club on the island. "One big issue I noticed was the huge lack of activity available for the youth," McCoy said. This left the youth to struggle and feel hopeless sometimes.

McCoy had been boxing since 2001 and felt he had the necessary experience to coach the sport. Being part of a boxing club felt like being a part of a special kind of support system, just like a large family. So he started one in Gambell.

On the island, he learned firsthand that he came from a long line of survivors who have thrived on St Lawrence Island. Life there is both harsh weather-wise, but at the same time it provides nature's bounty in terms of whales, walrus and seals.

Being nicknamed "The walrus capitol of the world," it is home to many talented ivory carvers. McCoy learned the art of carving from his uncle Ron Apangalook.

"Carving is one of the traditions I have picked up and I hope to learn and grow stronger with my people and my culture," he said. McCoy has carved a piece for the Shaktoolik school. A big whalebone centerpiece studded with ivory carvings of a basketball-shooting king polar bear, seabirds, a whale and a seal is displayed at the Gambell school. The NACTEC piece will stay at NACTEC.

There is some sense of humor as well in the carvings. The king polar bear he carved for the Gambell school shows the iconic animal in mid-jump as a basketball player going for the basket.

He said his participation in subsistence hunts enrich his art. "In the spring of 2012, I went hunting on my family boat for whale and walrus. I got to see live walrus for the first time in my life and it was a wild thrill that I will cherish my whole life," he said. The hunting experience lead to a walrus hunting carving he completed in July 2012.

With his fiancée Jewel Carolyn "Ayuwighsaan" Koonooka, he taught the introductory class to traditional arts at NACTEC. His art can be seen in regional schools, and in gift shops in Nome and Anchorage.

"It took me a lot of searching and brought me on an amazing adventure to find my niche in this world," McCoy said.

THE SHOP— McCoy shows off his carving work shop he built in Gambell.

DRILLING— McCoy drills holes in a piece of ivory in preparation for baleen inlays.

GAMBELL SCHOOL— McCoy carved the centerpiece for the Gambell school's display, a whalebone with carvings of king polar bear "Qughsatkut", seabirds, whales and seals.

WORK IN PROGRESS— The work bench at McCoy's studio has several figurines in different work stages.

ADDED CHARM— Yes, the door knob is a little low, but it adds to the building's charm.

City Council kills new taxes on businesses and nonprofits

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome business owners, representatives from nonprofit organizations and members of the general public packed Council Chambers Nov. 24 to give Nome Common Council members a clear message: No new taxes to fill a hole in the City's budget left by dwindling state and federal support.

Council members got it. They blocked introductions of measures to tax unsold business inventories and charge sales tax on purchases by nonprofit groups.

However, the Council cleared the way to put personal property tax on airplanes.

The City's budget is short $800,000.

Make equal cuts in department budgets, members of the public said—don't put the deficit on the backs of those who could least afford it.

On first reading, the Council could not discuss the ordinances amending the local tax law among themselves or with the public until the second reading at the next regular Council meeting.

However, by law, the Council allowed testimony during public comment.

Business owners and nonprofits were loaded for bear. Once the agenda reached the public comment period and the public took the podium, the tax ordinances were all over but the shouting.

Barb Nickels, representing 78 businesses and supporting agencies comprising the Nome Chamber of Commerce, led the charge against the proposed ordinance removing the business inventory tax exemption.

It was already difficult to maintain stable inventories for sale to households and necessary for the safe and efficient function of the City because of "continual sustained increases in the cost of fuel and transportation, Nickels said.

Maintaining the inventories helped to decrease the impacts on supply caused by severe weather, fuel shortages and transportation delays, especially during the long winter months, she said.

"Local merchants and other businesses will have an incentive to assure adequate stocks are always on hand where they do not face a tax liability for those inventories on an annual basis," Nickels said, noting

Allen was arraigned in state Superior Court Second District in Nome on Dec. 1.

She waived reading of the charges and pleaded innocent to all charges.

District Attorney John Earthman asked that $20,000 be added to the bail for her current custody on a prior assault charge. Judge Tim Dooley agreed and set the bail on the fire-related charges at $22,000.

DEC looks for innovative water and sewer solutions

By Diana Haecker

For most people in the Lower 48 the concept of an outhouse or a household without running water conjures up visions of Third World countries.

But honeybuckets and hauled water are still the reality for many communities in Alaska and the Bering Strait and Norton Sound regions are no exception.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

To address this, the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation launched a competition called the Alaska Water and Sewer Challenge to come up with innovative solutions to the water and sewer dilemma faced by many rural communities not hooked up to water and sewer services.

Year after year, Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium officials report to the joint boards of Norton Sound Health Corporation and Kawerak Inc. that federal and state dollars are getting harder to obtain, but yet the need for basic services such as sewer and water increases.

Wales is one of the 40 or so communities in Alaska without a water and sewer system. Mayor Dan Richard said that the economy of scale works against building water and sewer infrastructure for small communities. "Our biggest problem is the lack of population," Richard said. "If you have only 150 people living in a village, how do you pay for installing a system and who will pay for the operation and maintenance?" He calculated that the installation of a regular citywide water and sewer system would cost between $400,000 and $500,000 per household. "Then you're looking at a couple hundred dollars to charge the customers just for water and sewer," he said. That's an astronomical water bill for households in small rural communities that still use a mixed cash and subsistence economy.

According to the Alaska Water and Sewer Challenge website, nearly 40 Alaska villages, including Little Diomede, Wales, Shishmaref, Teller and Stebbins are classified "unserved."

Per DEC definition, "an unserved community is one in which 55 percent or less of homes are served by a

Dear Nancy

I am writing to you from Scotland where my mother, Elizabeth Chapman Beberman is presently with me. She taught school in Nome in 1946 where she met and married my father, the late Prof Max Beberman who had been stationed there in the Signal Corps during WWII. After the war ended he was teaching at Nome High School. My mother keeps on talking about the spy she had befriended during that time. A woman who was led away in chains by the FBI for spying. Do you have any information on this?

Thank you Alice Beberman Chute Inveresk, Scotland

Editor's note: Readers, can you help her?

Dear Editor,

I'd like your community to know how much I enjoy reading about what you guys are doing. Everything from your Annual Fire Dept Carnival to your high school basketball scores. It's where I go to escape what consumes the media outlets here in the lower-48. Thank you for the glimpse into a town that is always cooler than where I live weather wise.

I wish you a glorious holiday season filled with love for each and every one of your citizens. Elisa Aboativeh.

Dear Editor:

The Bowhead Whale Riders crew had accidentally perished 9.5 years ago. None of their hunting gear had been washed ashore. Except on November 19, 2014, a seal hunter found their Whale Push Gun, at the hunting ground at Tepraagek, north shores from the village.

He immediately returned it to the immediate family. We are very grateful for his action of returning it to us. Thank you very much!

The Push Gun handle is as if brand new, no damage or mar on the ropes and electrical tape. The paint and engraved last name is not peeled or marred. The only missing part of it is the gun. From where it was intact was recently sawed off. Even the sawed part had saw imprints.

We believe the Whale Push Gun was found not long after the accident and have been kept secret until his conscience could not keep it secret. So he saw off the gun and threw the handle out to the sea, thinking we will be destroyed. Whoever you are, we care about you. You make us happy because we at least have little bit our missing lives is found, although it is only a Whale Push Gun handle.

God knows we are only human and make mistakes. But he loves us, no matter what we do and say. With God, there is no secret, he knows every thing we do and say. He is everywhere, wherever we are. We can't keep secrets with what we do.

We praise God, our grief is lessened and this may be the closure for our grief, because we will see our loved ones who passed away when Jesus returns to earth, which is very soon. May God bless everyone who prays for grieving families.

Thank you, The Nowpahahoks,

The family of Bowhead Whale Riders

Dear Editor:

Regarding your story in last week's Nugget, "Team updates regional salmon plan." Nome Fishermen's Association will be responding by mail to all of the verbal requests for information made by Charlie Lean and Sam Rabung at the last Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Planning Team meeting.

The audio recording of the meeting made by ADF&G shows that statements about NFA quoted in the story are not true.

NFA members have been working on the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Comprehensive Salmon Plan since 1992.

At the meeting November 21, we heard reports that based on the best available science, few, if any, salmon were added to the Norton Sound subsistence and commercial harvest last summer as a result of projects carried out under the CSP. The biggest success story was finding 178 dead silver salmon in Anvil Creek including five marked fish.

We also were told that nothing better is planned for next summer.

It's been that way since 1992. Jack Johnson Nome, AK 99762

Catch the Spirit

This Saturday Nomeites will have a chance to catch up with a timehonored tradition, the Firemen's Carnival. For over a hundred years the carnival has evolved from the ladies social garden party to the firemen's main fundraiser. It's gone from the crowded gym of the old elementary school to the well-filled space of the Nome Rec. Center.

New fire fighting equipment and training will benefit from the outpouring of community support for our volunteer firefighters. The Carnival serves as a means of support for other benevolent volunteer organizations such as the Nome Rotary, the Volunteer Ambulance Service, the Pioneers, the Nome Education Association, the Public Employees' organization and many others. It is these volunteer organizations that make Nome such an incredible public-spirited community. The Firemen's Carnival is a way for folks in Nome and our neighboring communities to have fun and show support for our volunteer benevolent organizations.

Let's reach deep into our pockets and purses and buy raffle tickets, turkey tickets, good food and bingo cards. Let's have fun and support our volunteers. Catch the spirit. — N.L.M.—

After the 2013/2014 winter that left the region warmer than many parts of the Lower 48 and cheated residents out of a regular winter, the most recent snowfall in Nome brought back a feeling of normalcy.

By Diana Haecker

Metereologist Robert Murders at the Nome office of the National Weather Service confirmed that yes, the region is back on track when it comes to "normal" snowfall. Since September 1, a snowfall amount of 5.28 inches would be considered normal. Nome had 4.56 inches.

Much of this came down since the day before Thanksgiving and the weekend thereafter. According to Murders, here are the numbers: Wednesday Nov. 15 saw 3.4 inches of snowfall; Thanksgiving saw 1.9 inches followed up by 1.9 inches of snow that fell on Friday and Saturday, respectively.

Region sees first significant snowfall of this winter

On Sunday, the snowfall let up and accumulated only to 0.9 inches.

In the early part of November snow did begin to fly, but the mid-November warm spell melted all but traces of it away, leaving only glare ice behind.

The Nome police responded to a vehicle roll over near Icy View on Thursday evening, but no injuries were reported. Police Chief John Papasodora said in an email to the Nugget that there were several vehicles that slid off the road and some that were stuck on flat ground. "It is recommended that all motorists check the condition of their vehicle to include tires with sufficient tread to operate safely under inclement winter driving conditions," Papasodora wrote. He recommended to carry basic emergency equipment including a shovel and friction material like cat litter or sand in the vehicle. "Drive slowly and increase following/stopping distance to avoid collisions and provide safety for yourself and others. Drive defensively, wear your seatbelt and make sure that all windows are clear before driving," Papasodora wrote.

The Nome post of the Alaska State Troopers received no reports of stuck vehicles or accidents on roads outside the city limits.

Korean fishing vessel sunk off Kamchatka

The Coast Guard is assisting the Kamchatka Border Guard Directorate and good Samaritans in their search for survivors of the South Korean flagged 326-foot fishing vessel 501 Oryong, that sank off the coast of Chukotka, in the Bering Sea on Sunday evening.

A Coast Guard Air Station Kodiak HC-130 Hercules airplane crew and the crew of the Coast Guard Cutter Munro with an Air Station Kodiak MH-65 Dolphin helicopter were dispatched to the scene on Monday morning. The Munro was expected to arrive on scene on Wednesday.

The Kamchatka Border Guard Directorate reported the vessel was carrying 62 crewmembers at the time of the sinking; seven crewmembers in a raft were rescued by a good Samaritan, 54 crewmembers are unaccounted for and one crewmember died of hypothermia.

The C-130 returned to Kodiak on Tuesday night with no survivor having been found.

Coast Guard spokeswoman Diana Honings told The Nome Nugget that the U.S. Coast Guard offered assets in the search and the Kamchatka Border Guard Directorate accepted the offer.

"Our ultimate goal is protecting life at sea whether at home or internationally, which is why we are working closely with the Kamchatka Border Guard Directorate to find survivors," said Capt. Diane Durham, chief of response, Coast Guard 17th District. "There are also five good Samaritan vessels on scene that are assisting in the search for survivors; their commitment to helping is commendable.'

The Kamchatka Border Guard Directorate reported the 501 Oryong was hauling in its catch when a wave hit and flooded the boat's storage chambers with seawater.

The Coast Guard Cutter Munro is a 378-foot high endurance cutter homeported in Kodiak.

BOEM seeks comments on supplemental EIS for drilling in the Chukchi Sea

The federal agency overseeing the exploration and development of energy resources is holding a series of public comment meetings this month to hear from the public. At issue is a court-ordered draft supplemental Environmental Impact Statement issued for lease sale 193, held in 2008, in the Chukchi Sea. The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, BOEM for short, will take this input into consideration when preparing the final SEIS.

After the final SEIS will be approved by the court, lease development can take place. Shell Gulf of Mexico, Inc. has in 2012 begun exploration in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas. On Aug. 28, 2014 BOEM's Alaska Region received from Shell Gulf of Mexico, Inc., a revised version of their Chukchi Sea Exploration Plan. The draft version of the exploration plan includes sections about oil and hazardous substances spill information. The draft plan reveals that Shell plans to stage several tug and barge oil spill containment system vessels in Goodhope Bay in Kotzebue Sound. The vessels expected to moor in a yet to be determined location include a containment system tug and barge, a nearshore oil spill response tug and barge and two supply tugs and barges. Crew changes will occur throughout the season using shallow water vessels, yet to be contracted, transiting out from Kotzebue to the vessel locations in Kotzebue Sound. Vessels may also receive resupply of food stores via a shallow water vessel, the plan says.

At Monday night's public hearing in Anchorage, a coalition of environmental groups projected a "Save the Arctic" message on the side of the Crowne Plaza Hotel as Alaska Natives, Arctic experts and local activists testified for Arctic protection from oil drilling before Bureau of Ocean Energy Management officials.

BOEM's environmental impact analysis predicted a 75 percent chance of a large spill, more than a thousand barrels, if Shell finds oil in the Chukchi Sea. Shell has spent more than $6 billion on purchasing oil leases and pursuing Arctic oil ex-

NOAA Fisheries proposes Arctic ringed seal critical habitat, seeks public comment

In December 2012, NOAA Fisheries declared four subspecies of ringed seals, including the Arctic ringed seal in Alaskan waters, as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). After input from local and state governments, Native partners, and the public to determine proposed critical habitat areas, NOAA Fisheries this week released proposed designations for public comment. The proposed critical habitat designation includes no regulatory restrictions, only a consultation requirement for federal agencies.

Arctic ringed seals are also protected under the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

The proposed critical habitat area in the northern Bering, Chukchi, and Beaufort seas provides sea ice conditions that are essential for the survival of Arctic ringed seals. The designation of critical habitat areas, land or water under United States jurisdiction that includes habitat features essential to the conservation of a threatened or endangered species, is required for species listed under the ESA.

Ringed seals nurse and protect their pups in snow caves, which are threatened by late ice formation in the fall, rain-on-snow events in the late winter, earlier break-up of spring ice, as well as decreasing snow depths, which are projected to be too shallow for snow cave formation by the end of the century. Ringed seals also rely on sea ice for extended periods during molting, breeding, whelping, and nursing. Scientific evidence shows that sea ice is projected to shrink both in extent and duration in the future.

A critical habitat designation must be supported by a full analysis of economic, national security, and other impacts. In 2012, the President directed that any future designations of critical habitat carefully consider all public comments on relevant science and economic impact, including those that suggest methods for minimizing regulatory burdens. NOAA Fisheries is releasing its draft analysis of these impacts for review during the comment period. NOAA Fisheries is also seeking input on whether any particular areas should be considered for exclusion from the proposed critical habitat.

Upon designation of a critical habitat area, federal agencies are required to consult with NOAA Fisheries on actions they authorize, fund, or carry out to ensure their actions are not likely to destroy or adversely modify critical habitat. Designation of critical habitat would not affect subsistence harvest of ringed seals by Alaska Natives.

There will be a 90-day public comment period on the proposal and NOAA Fisheries will soon announce locations and times for public hear-that she was reading directly from a resolution on an ordinance introduced in 2002 and signed again in 2006 to authorize the business inventory exemption.

Nickels noted that the new tax would apply effective Jan. 1 after businesses had already ordered and received their goods for the long winters.

"And again, these same goods will be taxed by City of Nome when they are sold. How can the City of Nome expect to receive taxes on the same inventory twice?" she asked the Council.

The Chamber had a bylaw to buy locally, but as prices rose, they might have to change the bylaw, Nickels warned.

Councilmember Stan Andersen had a response to Nickels' presentation.

"Has the Chamber looked at our budget? Where to cut and when to cut? Where to raise money?"

Melanie Bahnke, president of the nonprofit Kawerak, Inc. told the Council they should cut the budget before increasing taxes. The repeal of the exemption on taxing business inventory would affect the economic well being of the people in the Norton Sound region, one of Kawerak's goals. Kawerak runs more than 20 programs that improve the region's social, economic and cultural conditions, she added.

The proposal would "likely result in a direct increase of expenses to the region," she said. "The cost of living in this region is already astronomically higher than the rest of the nation. Increasing the cost of goods sold locally will also likely result in a reduction of local sales if people turn to vendors like Amazon to avoid the increased costs resulting from this new tax."

Andersen would like to see the attempt to tax business inventory buried once and for all.

All Council could do was to introduce the measure, take it to second reading for a vote and vote it down, he said. That would not happen this time.

When a Council member introduced the repeal of the exemption for business inventory, the Council did not allow the measure to go into first reading.

Nonprofit representatives also provided an earful for Council members.

Danielle Slingsby, head of Nome Community Center, said the Center runs XYZ Senior Center, the food bank, a children's home, teen center and other programs that would be affected by taxing the nonprofit's purchases, all of which go directly to the programs.

"We have been pleased by the nonprofits being exempt," Slingsby told the Council. "If you take that away from nonprofits, you are taking it away from the services and those who most need them."

The ordinances allowing business inventory and nonprofit purchases to be taxed should not even have the dignity of first and second reading on the agenda, Brian Stockman said, "unless you can fully fund the nonprofits."

A motion to introduce the ordinance on repealing the tax exemption for nonprofits died for lack of a second

However, a measure to apply personal property tax on airplanes did make it into first reading. That ordinance repealing the exemption on airplanes will go to second reading, discussion and a vote on final passage at the next regular Council meeting.

Paul Kosto, station manager for Alaska Airlines took the podium. He would like to hear Council discussion on what an airplane owner would get for paying taxes, he said. He wanted to see an analysis of the real life impact. Airports in Juneau and Kenai are owned by the cities, and taxed, but these airports provide more amenities.

"Once you start taxing, we will want something in return," Kosto told the Council. "If we all get taxed, there will be an impact on revenue."

That impact could be felt by consumers and could make some air transport companies move their bases. The City should cut back, Kosto advised.

"I think we have a spending issue [the City]. It takes real creativity to tighten the purse strings on spending," he added.

Ken Hughes agreed. "Look at what you are short, cut each department a percentage and let the departments decide what to cut.

City Manager Josie Bahnke said that departments had already met and cut back. She said perhaps it was unclear which services had priority for the public and a lack of understanding of the difference between what services are desirable and what is the mission of City government. The City had been looking at ways to make up the $800,000 shortage. The City had put on sale 31 surplus city lots worth over $600,000 as one way, also getting them onto the City's tax rolls, she said.

"Everybody is always trying to figure out how to keep it from coming out of 'my pocket," Rolland Trowbridge said.

Trowbridge, the owner and operator of Trinity Sails and Repairs, provided a lone voice on the need for taxes to fund City services. "There's a lot of business going on in Nome where sales tax isn't being collected. A lot of people doing business on the side, repairs, the kind of stuff where they're just taking cash money," he said. "For those people doing that, you're not helping yourself, you're not helping anybody, because that is what it costs to run this town.

"The reality is, I depend on this city to function correctly for my business to operate, and so do the nonprofits. We all need to start saying, OK, where do we want the money to come from? "Trowbridge said

In other business, the Council:

• Held a work session before the meeting with Sen. Donny Olson and Rep. Neal Foster to discuss Nome's priorities for funding from the upcoming legislature. The state is also experiencing a budget shortfall from loss of federal funds and downward spiraling oil prices upon which 80 percent of state budgeting depends.

• Awarded construction of the Port of Nome Middle Dock project to Orion Construction out of California, which came in with a low bid of $7,082,100. The only other company to submit a bid, Manson Construction, bid about $5 million more—$11,732,550. The City has $9.4 million for the project from federal, state and Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.—leaving $2 million over the Orion bid. The Council and port administration agreed to look into using the $2 million to enlarge the causeway project.

 Authorized the sale of surplus real property, 31 lots, owned by City of Nome.

• Approved a resolution certifying that City of Nome suffered impacts from fishing activities within the Norton Sound Fisheries Management Area to enable the City to apply for funding under the FY15 Shared Fisheries Business Tax Program.

• Discussed capping the expense of a rate analyst to analyze Nome Joint Utility System's electric service rates at $30,000. The question was who would pay, NJUS or the City? Andersen advocated adding the $30K to a $2.2 million credit line the City has provided NJUS during a current cash flow pinch.

• Received a big Thank You from Stan Hooley, Iditarod's executive director, for support from the City of Nome for the annual Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race.

The Iditarod organization appreciated the substantial investment of time, help from public works, volunteers and contributions, Hooley said. Andersen responded that he appreciated a face-to-face thank you in lieu of an annual thank you letter.

• Ruled that employment of Adrienne Bahnke, a stepsister to Mayor Denise Michels, did not violate the City's nepotism law, as Michels did not have supervision over the janitor right for a bail hearing when more information became available.

Dooley set Allen's next court appearance for January 30.

According to the grand jury document, Allen intentionally damaged property by starting a fire or causing an explosion, and by that act recklessly placed another person in danger of serious physical injury.

Arson in the Second Degree deals with knowingly damaging a building by starting a fire or causing an explosion.

The grand jury found enough evidence that Allen started the fire at Third Ave. and Moore on Sept. 26 and put other occupants in fear of imminent physical injury by means of a dangerous instrument. Occupants of the building at the time of the fire testified before the grand jury.

The grand jury handed up 10 charges, but the district attorney's office withdrew three assault charges.

The fire broke out around suppertime. John O'Connor, who was napping in a first floor apartment near the start of the blaze, woke up and noticed smoke at the ceiling level.

"Then it came down all around me. I threw my clothes out the window and dived out in just my shorts. There was so much going on that nobody noticed me standing there like that without clothes and shoes," O'Connor said. "I saw a friend and asked him if I could borrow some shoes."

Flames consumed at least two apartments and damaged several apartments in the west end of the nine-unit complex and displaced about 20 people from their homes.

It took 27 firefighters three hours to quell the flames with axes, chainsaws, a pump truck and a ladder truck.

In the immediate days following the fire, Nome turned out with donations for the people who lost their belongings to the blaze. Nome Baptist Church, Methodist Thrift Shop and other groups opened doors to donors who shared with the people who had no place to go and nothing to use for everyday activities, Bering Straits Native Corporation opened 10 rooms and a place to rest their heads for the displaced people in the corporation's Aurora Inn hotel.

Jerald Brown of BSNC applauded the generosity of the Nome community.

No occupants of the building were injured. Two individuals went to Norton Sound Regional Hospital for slight smoke inhalation, one of which was Allen, who faces a separate charge on assault filed the night of the fire, alleging that she had assaulted and bitten a doctor at the hospital. The district attorney's office filed a Petition to Revoke Probation on an earlier conviction based on evidence that Allen had broken probation conditions by being under the influence of alcohol the night of the fire

Allen has been in custody at Anvil Mountain Correctional Facility since the night of the fire, Sept. 26.

Water and sewer, port and school lighting top City's Legislative funding wish list

The Nome Common Council met with the region's legislative representatives to get a feel for approving the City's wish list of capital proj-

Rep. Neal Foster and Sen. Donny Olson had a similar message; oil prices are down, state revenues are down and discretionary spending would be slim. The pair will be representing Nome in Juneau when the legislature begins a session in Janu-

Both Foster and Olson held out belief and hope that the new gubernatorial team of Gov. Bill Walker and Lt. Gov. Byron Mallott would have a soft spot in their hearts for rural Alaska.

Operating and capital spending is up, but oil prices are down, Foster

In 1987, Alaska was producing two million barrels a day. In five years production had dropped to 150 thousand barrels a day, but that was not an emergency because oil prices continued to climb.

Now production is down and so are the prices.

Recently, the price per barrel has fallen from $105 to $75. The price pattern correlates to decreasing capital projects, Foster said. He added that projections say that oil prices are not going to turn around.

Medicaid, state retirement and other expenses are going up. The operating budget goes up each year. "Do you cut teachers? Do you lower pensions? Do you cut healthcare?" Foster asked.

The opening of ANWR would put money into the system. Capping or discontinuing the Permanent Fund Dividend would help greatly, but these are unpopular fixes and are not likely to happen, Foster said.

He advised that Nome's strategy should be mindful of a mandate to provide health, welfare and education, areas more likely to be funded. Energy costs is a big issue.

Local issues that can be shown to be state issues have a better chance of funding. Nome should submit both large and small projects for funding.

As Nome looks at submitting large projects as port related projects, the City should also submit a list of small things to choose from, as the discretionary funding share for each community was likely to be small, Foster said.

Bush Alaska should not take a back seat, Olson said, as it is from Bush Alaska that the state owes its beginnings and revenues. He pins his hopes on the new administration, "like a breath of fresh air," he said. Olson noted that the new governor, Bill Walker, was appointing department commissioners and officials who "know how to listen."

He and Foster are gaining in seniority, Olson observed, and thinks the districts' standing will improve.

Olson will be a part of the minority, having been replaced in the majority by Lyman Hoffman from Bethel, but Olson stays at the top of the Senate Finance Committee with a hand on the purse strings, he said.

"I'd like to be optimistic, but it's politics. Sometimes it's for you, and sometimes it's more for you," he concluded.

The Council had a list of legislative priorities on the table. At the top of Nome's list are water and sewer infrastructure, $4.3 million; Causeway Middle Dock construction, $ 3.0 million; Kegoayah Kozga Library construction, $1.9 million; and Arctic Deep Draft Port/Nome Causeway extension.

The Council also had a list of infrastructure items for advocacy to legislature and state administration. for example, pedestrian safety improvements on Greg Kruschek Avenue, extension of Steadman Street to Greg Kruschek Avenue, dump truck and sander, $250,000, covered multi-use recreational structure [including an ice rink], and Nome seawall extension and repair.

The Nome School Board also has a list of top priorities for the legislature: District-wide lighting replacement cost recovery application, $267,165; Nome Elementary School Gym flooring replacement cost recovery, $107,692 and Nome-Beltz Campus electrical service and generator system, $650,000, estimated.

The Nome Public School and Alaska Association of School Boards also has a list of joint priorities. At the top of this list of 19 priorities is universal access to education for Alaska's three-and four-year-old learners, Betsy Brennan, local board member told the Council. Another item on the list, opposing school vouchers, was a strong priority, she Taxpayer-funded vouchers for private, parochial or home school tuition and fees drain scarce resources from public classrooms and diminish revenues available for public schools, said a Nome Public Schools statement of priorities provided by Brennan.

The City also had a list of federal funding priorities for its lobbyist, Larry Markley—at the top: Arctic Deep Draft Port/Nome Causeway extension, community power generation issues (alternative energy sources, power distribution system upgrades and enhanced energy storage, acquisition of the USAF West Nome Tank Farm and Lot 20 by Port Road.

Markley, by telephone, told the Council that there was no chance that the moratorium on earmarking specific projects was going to be reversed with Republicans dominating both houses.

"The big issue for Nome is to be sure the port stays in the forefront,' he said. He added that getting the tank farm transferred to Nome ownership looked good.

"I think we are in there, to transfer the property to the City at no cost," Markley said.

The City needs the property for expansion of port facilities and operations, relocation of fuel storage facilities and to make traffic safety routing changes.

piped, septic and well, or covered haul system.'

Of the more than 200 communities in rural Alaska, the unserved communities are located mainly in western Alaska and along the Yukon River and its tributaries.

This is what "unserved" looks like: Wales, for example, has a washeteria with washing machines and showers. The water originates from a set of wells a mile away and is piped into the 500,000-gallon washeteria tank. Some people get water from this central location, others go to the village creek outside of town and haul water for their household from there. In the winter, people chop ice from the creek, haul it home, place it in a clean container and let it thaw out for drinking water.

The washeteria in Teller functions as the main source of water. Teller Vice Mayor Joe Garnie said the washeteria has two shower stalls, one for women, one for men, "The entire village is taking showers there," he said. A sign says that there is no warm water coming out of the showers when the washing machines are running. This means that 240

Teller residents have to time when to wash clothes and when to shower because both can't be done simultaneously. Also, the flush toilets are not working. "The toilets have been duct-taped shut for years," Garnie

For the lack of flush toilets in the homes, the honeybucket is still not in the museum as former Governor Tony Knowles proclaimed, but can be found in bathrooms across the region. A honeybucket is a five-gallon bucket lined with a garbage bag.

In Teller, such a honeybucket can be found in the village clinic. According to Garnie, each winter, the village clinic's septic system fails and patients as well as clinic staff and providers are using the honeybucket. There is no running water to wash hands after using the facilities.

Vice Mayor Garnie points out that the flush toilets and the septic installed in the 1950s in the former BIA school, now used as teacher housing and workshop space, are still working. "Why can modern technology not get the clinic right?"

Typically, when the honeybucket is full, it is taken out of the house or the clinic. According to Wales

Mayor Richard, the garbage bags filled with human waste are placed in one of the 14 or 15 honeybucket bins located throughout Wales. A city worker drives in the summer with a four-wheeler and a trailer, in the winter with a snowmachine and trailer, to empty the bins and take the bags filled with human waste to the sewage hole a mile outside of town. Wales charges $20 per month per household in honeybucket disposal

According to the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation' Village Safe Water program, residents in homes without running water and flush toilets have higher risks to get acute respiratory infections and severe skin infections than persons with in-home running water.

A 2010 study found higher rates of invasive pneumococcal disease among Alaskan children who did not have access to piped water. The disease is a very serious bacterial infection that can affect the brain, blood and lungs. Access to running water and the ability to wash hands frequently can reduce the spread of the disease.

Mat-Su Borough legally protects the "Right to Mush"

Legislative efforts are underway to add teeth to the Right to Mush resolution passed by the 28th Alaska Legislature

Dy Carab Millon

Alaska became the country's first "Right to Mush" state in March, and just weeks ago, the Mat-Su Borough became the first place where this right is legally protected in Alaska.

While House Concurrent Resolution 24 was a resolution bearing no legal enforcement, the ordinance in Mat-Su is the first of its kind to enforce protection of mushing activities with criminal charges for interference.

"As soon as the Right to Mush passed in the legislature, we knew it was time to move on this," said Assemblyman Vern Halter of Willow, who authored the ordinance.

While the Knik Sled Dog and Recreation Special Land Use District designated a specific location for sled dog recreation in 2008, this ordinance prohibits actions that deliberately interfere with the activities of mushers on shared use trails, while addressing legitimate concerns about humane kennel operations.

The ordinance amends Title 24 of the borough code that regulates animal care to include sled dogs and mushing facilities in the areas outside of Palmer, Wasilla and Houston, which have their own animal ordinances. The ordinance provides the first legal definition of a sled dog ever drafted, written as "a member of the genus and species Canis familiaris that is domesticated, owned, and used to pull a sled or vehicle under the control of a musher." The ordinance also clarifies that sled dogs fit the definition of livestock, according to borough code, thus exempting dog lots from the animal annoyance code. Halter, a private attorney, former Magistrate Judge, and public defender, said the definition and ordinance took two years to

The purpose of the ordinance is to ensure protections for both sled dogs as well as mushers, preserving the sport and the existence of kennels while setting high standards of care for the dogs. The standards combine those already included in the code's animal care regulations with a list of requirements modeled from Mush with P.R.I.D.E.,'s kennel certification checklist. Mush with P.R.I.D.E., a voluntary organization of mushers and mushing enthusiasts, created the checklist to promote responsible and humane care of sled dogs. The requirements listed in the borough code range from providing for the dogs' basic needs including water, shelter, and diet, while also addressing proper methods of sanitation, husbandry, humane restraint, kennel construction and maintenance, and even emergency evacuation plans. Compliance with the regulations is required for kennel owners to be eligible for the protections that the ordinance offers.

Owners must have a minimum of three years of licensed kennel operations to apply for a mushing facility license. As the code entails regulations for housing as well as food storage, kennel owners must have the existing facilities and infrastructure to be eligible to apply for a license. There must also be a minimum of three years of mushing history, whether for travel, freight, recreational or professional purposes. Licenses require owners to allow inspection of their kennels to ensure compliance with animal care regulations. Cruelty to animals and failure to provide humane care can result in revoked licenses, among other legal consequences. "This is a very detailed piece of legislation," explained lenge. It all comes down to affordability not only to build sustainable water and sewer systems but more importantly to have the budget to maintain them. "My hope is that we get everybody running water," he said. "But if we can't afford it, we can't afford it."

Halter. "It's not carte blanche, open to any musher. They have to demonstrate a commitment."

The code also addresses appropriate training and exercise practices specific to sled dogs.

Tethering and restraint are particularly important issues addressed in the code, said Halter, because of their purposes to mushing. Restraint is redefined in the code to include voice command, meaning that the dogs can be off leash or physical restraint, which is a common practice among mushers who are training young dogs to run alongside a harnessed team and to respond to the musher's verbal commands. The definition of restraint was patterned after hunting laws, which consider voice commands as an acceptable restraint for retrieving dogs, who must be allowed off leash in order to participate in the hunting activity. "Free running, and learning to respond to voice commands are essential to training the dogs," explained Halter, who has a long personal history with sled dogs and mushing, including participation in the Iditarod, Yukon Quest. Halter currently coaches competitive mushers.

Tethering is another issue specifically addressed by the ordinance, defined as "to restrain an animal by a chain or cable line which is attached to a fixed object." Under the ordinance, the tether must be long enough to allow dogs freedom of movement and adequate exercise.

Drafting a specific definition of tethering as a necessary and humane method for controlling the dogs was important because of the movement promoted by animal rights activists to ban it. Halter explained, "Such a ban would virtually destroy sled dog kennels and racing."

The ordinance addresses the perceived nuisance posed by the noise of sled dogs, acknowledging that sled dog kennels are "naturally

Since building traditional water and sewer systems is cost prohibitive, the DEC launched the Water and Sewer Challenge last year to find better and more affordable methods to deliver safe drinking water and sewage disposal to rural Alaska. DEC partnered up with the US Environmental Protection Agency, the US Dept. of Agriculture, the Indian Health Service, the Arctic Research Commission and Tanana Chief's Conference to form a steering committee.

In August 2013, the DEC launched the challenge by calling for a team competition to create cost-effective designs for water and sewer technologies constructed to function in arctic conditions. Last week, the DEC announced the selection of six entities out of 18 applicants to meet the challenge. The six entities are Cowater Alaska, Dowl HKM Alaska, Summit Consulting Services, Tetra Tech, University of Alaska Anchorage and Lifewater.

DEC Village Safe Water program director Bill Griffith explained the challenge these entities now face. "We require teams to work with end users from two unserved communities to come up with different designs for household systems," Griffith said.

The goal is to come up with running water and sewer systems at a reasonable cost to build and maintain. The performance target, Griffith said, is to allow each household system to consume 15 gallons of water per day per person. The target cost to build a system would be $160,000 or under, at an operational cost of $135 per month or less.

Design parameters include a mandatory kitchen sink, a bathroom sink, an inside toilet, a shower and a hook-up and drain for a washing machine. The system must withstand the possibility that the camp or house is left unheated for a while. It also must be feasible to install the new system in an existing home.

Written proposals by the six design teams are due by the end of June 2015, followed by live presentations. The DEC then picks the best three systems and the top three teams will receive funding to create a prototype of their systems in a laboratory. After the systems will be tested in the lab, there will be field tests conducted.

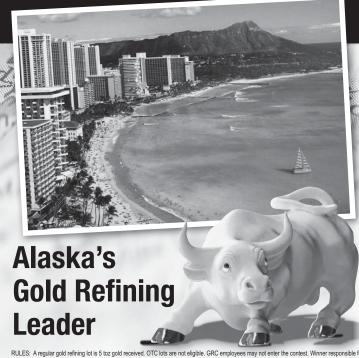

Team Dowl HKM was assigned to work with Shishmaref. According to DEC, team Tetra Tech will work with Wales.

Wales Mayor Richard added that technical solutions are out there and already are applied in his village. "We did a remodel on our clinic this summer and part of it was to integrate a new type of septic system which sits above ground and doesn't require a leach field," said Richard. Richard described several chambers inside this new septic tank, including ultraviolet action to keep the materials inside actively decomposing. "It percolates out clear water, not necessarily drinking quality, but it's clear," he said.

"I am happy to see people interested in the subject," he commented on the DEC Water and Sewer Chal-places of noise and commotion." The barking and elevated activity level of the dogs, caused by predictable events such as feeding, watering, harness hook-up, and the presence of other animals or wildlife, is normal and expected.

"An active kennel cannot be turned on and off like a machine," wrote Halter in the summary statement presented to the Mat-Su Borough Assembly before the hearing on the ordinance.

Assembly members voted to approve the ordinance, which states, "It is the intent of the Borough to recognize that responsible mushing facilities will create some impacts such as a certain amount of noise, which shall be considered acceptable." Under the ordinance, sled dogs are exempted from being included as animal annoyances.

Opposition to the existence of kennels in areas such as the Mat-Su Borough comes from the increased population growth in the area. Although mushing is a time-honored tradition and common practice there, with numerous professional and recreational dog kennels in the area, objections to the presence of kennels in residential neighborhoods and the use of trails for mushing exists. Halter explained, "There's a lot of people moving in who want to be in these subdivisions where the kennels already are, but they don't quite understand sled dogs and mushing. The ordinance serves the same purpose as the Right to Mush resolution—to ensure that mushing can survive and even thrive here."

The opposition has escalated to include aggressive actions toward the dogs and their owners, said Halter.

dogs and their owners, said Halter.
"Mushers have been getting lots of interference recently. There have been incidents of people felling trees behind the mushers as they go down the trail to block the trails and prevent them from returning. There have been shootings to spook the dogs. It's really isolated, with people targeting certain mushers. This ordinance treats those types of actions similar to interference with hunting activities such as trapping." Interfering with legal mushing activities can be cited as an infraction with a fine, or a misdemeanor. To be charged, there must be proof of intent.

Such protections would be welcomed in other areas of the state, where mushers have experienced lawsuits, harassment and intimidation by those who oppose their kennel operations or use of trails. Mitch Seavey, a high profile competitive musher whose accomplishments include two Iditarod victories, recently petitioned his state representative Mike Chenault to follow up the Right to Mush resolution with an amendment to the state nuisance law to include sled dogs among exempted livestock. Alaska Statute 09.45.235, which deals with agricultural operations as private nuisances, lists livestock as horses, cattle, sheep, bees, goats, swine, poultry, render, elk, bison, musk oxen, and "other animals kept for use or profit"

Tom Wright, Chief of Staff for Chenault, said that a bill has just been drafted to address this issue. "Sled dogs probably won't be included in the livestock category. The legal advice we were given is that they should have their own separate category, and be exempted from the nuisance laws unless existing ordinances are in place that already address them," Wright said.

Any legislation passed at the state level will be applicable to the unorganized parts of Alaska's boroughs. Wright predicted there would be much discussion around a variety of unforeseen considerations.

"All sides will have to be considered, especially when it comes to property rights," he commented.

The newly drafted bill will be presented during the legislative session scheduled to begin in January, and will go through the legislative process in which it may be referred to a specific house committee, where it will be open to public hearings and amendments.

'We will find out if this is an existing issue around the state for mushers," said Wright.

Some Nome residents would definitely agree that this is an existing issue.

The home of the Iditarod's finish line is not immune to opposing views on the suitability of maintaining sled dog kennels in residential areas. Nils Hahn, a four-time Iditarod finisher, and his wife Diana Haecker live several miles outside of the city limits of Nome, where they maintain a sled dog kennel on their property. Their home is in a subdivision, which is unregulated by the city, and is governed by covenants, none of which address the presence of sled dogs.

The two are currently facing litigation from their neighbors Kevin Bopp and his wife Lynn DeFilippo who find the presence of the sled dogs to be an impediment to quiet enjoyment of their own property.

Myron Angstman, attorney for Hahn and Haecker, said, "The question in this case is whether the activities and noise of the dogs are reasonable, and whether the neighbor's sensitivities to the activity and noise are reasonable. But these all relate back to the bigger question of whether dog teams are allowable in Alaska."

In a comment section on social media responding to an article on the Mat-Su ordinance Kevin Bopp stated that the minimum distance that dog teams should be kenneled from a neighbor's property should be a quarter mile.

This proposed distance is prohibitive to realistic kennel operations, argues Angstman. "Even though rural Alaska is lightly populated, that population is very concentrated in certain areas. There are places in Alaska where there aren't roads. There is a lot of land that is non-usable. If you can't be in or near a community, and operate your kennel near your home, then owning a kennel will be out of the question for many residents," Angstman said.

The attorney for Bopp and DeFilippo was contacted but a response was not received by deadline.

Nome Representative Neal Foster, who championed the "Right to Mush" resolution, believes that this is a pertinent issue for all Alaskan residents.

While Chenault is approaching the issue from the angle of agricultural nuisance laws, Foster is looking at the hunter harassment laws as a potential model for protecting the Right to Mush. These laws prohibit deliberate interference with recreational and subsistence activities, and carry the weight of fines or potential imprisonment. The felling of trees or firing of guns to spook dogs in deliberate attempt to interfere with mushing would be viewed as interferences similar to those identified in AS 16.05.790 as unlawful, such as "creating a visual, aural, olfactory, or physical stimulus in order to alter the behavior of the fish or game that another person is attempting to take or Foster's approach would take a more comprehensive view of protecting mushing activities that occur off of private land.

"Mushing by its nature occurs across multiple land types: private land, public land, state and municipal rights-of-way. As such, an approach that covers all of these areas seems in order," explained Paul LaBolle, staff to Foster, in an email.

The issue of mushing is clearly gaining public interest in Alaska, beyond mere curiosity about the results of the Last Great Race.

The passage of the Right to Mush resolution has been sparking debates about how this iconic Alaskan tradition and way of life can be continued in modern times.

The issues are complex, encompassing topics of recreational and economic opportunities to mush, ethical treatment of animals, and equitable land use and private property rights, with all discussion converging on the central question of what the "Right to Mush" means in practical terms for Alaskans.

Nome School Board considers new tech position and increase in physical activity for children

By Kristine McRae

Nome school district's Technology Director Robin Johnson attended last week's school board work session to provide support for her request of an additional position in her department.

Since 2009, when one full time staff member began to teach half time, the tech department has been operating with 2.5 employees.

In the meantime, the duties and programs for which the department is responsible have increased exponentially, according to Johnson.

Superintendent Steve Gast is in favor of the new hire and can see firsthand just how taxed the tech department is.

"One of the things we are experiencing with the tremendous demands which the state is putting on us, for testing purposes, is can we keep this tech ship up and running so that if something goes down we can fix it?" Gast said.

In a memo Johnson recently sent to Gast, she listed the numerous programs and duties for which the Technology Department is responsible.

While none could argue that the list was exhaustive, school board members wanted to clarify how the district proposed to fund the new position. "We keep talking about it but no one is explaining how we're paying for this," board member Jennifer Reader said. She felt that she sufficiently understood why the position was needed.

Gast assured the board that the district has the money, and that because the funds would come from the "classified" as opposed to the "certified" funds, the cost would not affect the direct instruction of the students. In fact, he said, it would serve to better support them.

"We've saved enough money this year in other areas to fund that position, but we also need to think about the future. This position is in the classified realm, and it wouldn't affect students, teachers, or instruction," Gast said.

Barb Amarok wondered if there was a direct relationship between adding a new tech position and improving the reading proficiency of more students. "I hear what you're saying, that we're not touching instructional money," Amarok explained, "but that's $80,000 that could be directed right at reading proficiency at the elementary school.'

For her part, Johnson is concerned that the ability of her staff to respond to the needs of teachers is waning.

"We like to pride ourselves on taking care of the teachers' requests," Johnson said, "but we're not even able to get to the help desk tickets, and that will affect their instruction."

Although the board doesn't normally approve classified positions, Gast told members he wanted to "keep them in the loop" because the technology department plays such a vital role in the district.

Stephanie Kemper is Nome's new Obesity Prevention Specialist. The position is funded through a grant received by the Nome Community Center, and last week Kemper joined school board members at their work session to go over what she feels are some priorities concerning physical activity in the schools. "I went over the new wellness policy, and I'm excited to see the new changes," Kemper told board members. Then she suggested changes that would increase the amount of physical education elementary school students receive.

Right now elementary students attend Physical Education class twice a week for 30 minutes. Kemper suggested the district consider upping that number, citing positive results from the elementary school in Seward, which implemented PE classes every day and has seen positive academic results.

Board members discussed options for adding time for more physical activity, but they also acknowledged the several existing opportunities that students already have, scheduling limitations, and the need for more volunteers to supervise those activi-

Kemper also shared that, now that Nome schools have breakfast and lunch programs that follow USDA (United States Department of Agriculture) standards, the district qualifies for two awards. One is through "Team Nutrition," which supports healthy school environments that are conducive to healthy eating and physical activity. The other program through which the schools can show progress and earn awards is the HealthierUS School Challenge (HUSSC).

As the Obesity Prevention Specialist, Kemper hopes to encourage reward systems and fundraising efforts that include healthy activities and healthy snacks as an alternative to candy and unhealthy foods.

Director of Human Resources and Special Programs Sean Arnold presented the board with a draft of the new teacher evaluation tool. According to the new state standards, all Alaska school districts must incorporate the new evaluation by the 2015-2016 school year. "Within this framework, everyone in the district is held accountable," Arnold said. "It meets all the requirements [of the state], the only thing that's missing is the student data piece, and we're waiting to see if the state will change those requirements."

Arnold was referencing the percentage of a teacher's evaluative score that would be based on the test scores of the students in his or her

Currently the state has set 50 percent as the measure, but several districts around the state are pushing for a much lower figure, like 20 percent. The new evaluation will also have a live observation component and incorporate a way to measure the implementation of cultural standards.

Board member Barb Amarok added that she hoped the new evaluation was able to acknowledge teachers who are teaching lessons that use our unique location and environment to augment their teaching.

Nome parent and PTA president Julie Kelso approached the board with the suggestion that the district offer instructional materials that are no longer in use at the schools to the public and to community organiza-

"Anchorage school district has a policy which gives the public access to those materials before they are disposed of," Kelso said. "I think this would benefit the district as we get new materials."

Board president Betsy Brennan indicated that the suggestion could be incorporated into an existing policy.

The next school board meeting is scheduled for Thursday, December 4.

CELEBRATING TRADITIONS- Nome Elementary School third graders read the story "Dancing Rainbows" by Evelyn Clarke Mott in early November. The story is about the Tewa Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and their traditions of dance around Feast Day and other times. As a community connection, the students worked with the King Island Dance Group to learn three traditional dances from this region. The students worked with the group for three days learning and practicing before performing for parents and community members on November 6. As a way to give thanks and show appreciation to Elders, the students performed again last Tuesday for the residents of Nome's Quyanna Care

Thomas finds running success in Connecticut

By Keith Conger

Three years ago, when Maisie Thomas enrolled as a sophomore at Hotchkiss, an independent boarding school, she needed to choose a sport to fulfill the school's participation requirement. On a recent trip back in Nome for the Thanksgiving break Thomas explained that on her preenrollment visit to the school, she met, and liked, the cross country running coach and decided to join the team. That institutional prerequisite has become a passion, and as it turns out she is very good at her new endeavor.

After spending the first 10 years of her schooling in Nome, Thomas entered The Hotchkiss school. She spent her sophomore year getting used to the 600 student school in Lakeville, Connecticut, which is nestled in the northwest corner of the state near the borders of New York and Massachusetts. It is certainly a less rural setting than she had grown up in. During her first year out east she learned to be a runner, and ran on the junior varsity squad; somewhere in the top 14 of her team.

The runner's dedication and determination were evident to Nome motorists who witnessed the countless hours she ran during the summer months. Her training paid great dividends. By her junior year she had earned a spot on the varsity unit. That year she was part of the Hotchkiss group that attended the New England Championships — the cross country season finale for prep schools from that part of the country — or as Thomas put it, "New Englands." During that first year on varsity Thomas represented her school at most races by being the sixth or seventh ranked Hotchkiss runner on the seven girl varsity squad. She placed 72nd at the 2013 New Englands

Continued summer training prior to her senior year, which included around 10 miles per week on the Nome Rec Center treadmills, helped to advance her ranking on the team. Thomas put in 35-45 mile training weeks during the off season, and she even won the 14 year and older category at Nome's Hammer on the Anvil mountain trail race this past August.

At the beginning of her senior season Thomas was consistently the fourth or fifth ranked Hotchkiss runner, but by season's end she had moved that up a few notches. During the season she set a personal record; running a five-kilometer race in 20:06. Thomas was her team's second ranked runner in two races, and ranked third on her team in the Founders League conference meet, cracking the top 20 with a time of 21:16. Thomas also helped her team take third at the 2014 New Englands with a 49th place finish.

Thomas recognizes the differences between the places she runs out east and the places she runs in

Nome. "We have very different cross country running courses," said Thomas. "Ours are grassy, with some woods, and lots of golf courses." In Connecticut she also doesn't have to worry about wild animals following her as she did last summer when she was accompanied by a wolf while training near Banner Creek

Cross country running has opened other adventures for Thomas. Last year she joined the track team, which is a typical thing for cross country runners to do in the off season. Thomas ran 1200-meter races, as well as competed in three-kilometer races. She enjoyed the experience, but prefers the longer five-kilometer races.

Thomas is beginning the process of finding a college where she can continue her competitive running. The top of her list is Colby College, an NCAA Division III school in Waterville, Maine.

"You have to put in the work," says Thomas as part of her great advise to the young runners of Nome. "Cross country (season) is only a few months long. It's really what you do for training in the summer and winter that counts. Running is so unique. You get what you put into it."

引いている Sumps up prize money for winner

By Diana Haecker

Monday, Dec. 1 was the last day to sign up for the 2015 Iditarod and according to the Iditarod website, 79 mushers were on the roster, including reigning champion Dallas Seavey and former champions Mitch Seavey, Lance Mackey, John Baker, Jeff King and Martin Buser.

The Iditarod Trail Committee announced an increase in overall purse from $625,100 to 725,100. But only the top five will notice the difference. The 2015 champion will take home $70,000. Last year's champion Dallas Seavey received a check over $50,400. The runner-up team will earn $58,600, up from $47,600 last year; the third place team will get $53,900 up $9,000 from last year; fourth place will get $48,400 and fifth place will make $44,300.

The race pays prize money to the 30th finisher. Other finishers receive a check of $1,049 (a dollar for each mile traveled).

The ITC also announced in press release that major trail work was done this summer between Rohn and Farewell. Heavy quipment was flown to the Farwell landing strip and 20 miles of tree stumps were ground, dead trees removed and the trail was widened.

The ITC reported that DNR and Iditarod Historic Trail Alliance provided funding. Cruz Construction donated in-kind worth about $85,000 to work on the trail.

The roster of Iditarod mushers still includes Karin Hendrickson, who last week suffered a broken back after being hit by a car while she was training her dog team along the Parks Highway in Willow.

The race will begin with the ceremonial start in Anchorage on March 7

As one of our longest-serving board members, Byron Mallott has provided direction and guidance to Alaska Air Group for more than 32 years. His knowledge and understanding of the people, cultures and communities of Alaska have been instrumental as the company has grown to better serve this great state.

Just as he has served our board, he has also contributed his time and energy to countless other organizations that greatly strengthen our community. We are confident that he will bring this same guidance and strength of character to his new leadership role.

Today we celebrate with all Alaskans as Byron Mallott becomes lieutenant governor of Alaska.

Kiana man found guilty of attempted murder

By Diana Haecker

After a weeklong trial in Kotzebue starting on Nov. 17, a jury found Kiana resident Teddy Smith guilty of two counts of attempted murder, three counts of felony assault, two counts of assault in the first degree, two counts of robbery by force and two counts of theft.

The jury handed in the guilty verdict on Monday, Nov. 24.

The trial took place more than two years after Smith unleashed a series of events that left residents of Kiana in fear and then two hunters nearly dead in the woods.

It all began on September 7, 2012, when Smith's mother Dolly died. Teddy Smith got on the VHF radio and announced her death, which was first labeled suspicious, but then troopers determined no foul play was involved in her passing. When efforts failed to revive her, Smith went outside their house, armed with a rifle and shot at the crowd that had gathered to lend sup-

Then Smith disappeared.

Ten days later, and 40 river miles upriver on the Squirrel River, two brothers were setting up camp at a wilderness cabin. The two are Paul and Charles Buckel who had floated down the Squirrel on a hunting trip. There, they ran into a man who introduced himself as "Paul" but as it turns out, it was Teddy Smith. Smith invited them in, helped them get their gear out of their floating raft and they sat down for a coffee. Then they discovered that their satellite phone was missing. While Paul Buckel was looking for it upstairs, Charles Buckel faced Teddy Smith, who produced a gun and shot Charles in the chest.

Smith then ordered the other brother at gunpoint to get the floatable canoe, which was tied up a little ways upriver and to bring it to the cabin. When Paul Buckel saw that around and tried to run away, but was shot in the back near the shoulder blade

Smith proceeded to pack the canoe with gear and food and took off. The brothers did not know for sure and were waiting, hiding in the bushes. Both severely wounded, they stayed put until Paul had wrapped his brother in insulating material before he went to search for an old marine radio and a battery. He found both and managed to place a call that got through to a person in Noorvik. Troopers were alerted and went to get them the next morning. Both hunters survived and were flown to hospitals in Fairbanks and Anchorage for surgery.

Meanwhile Teddy Smith was floating downriver and troopers arrested him without resistance.

Smith was taken to Kotzebue and indicted on several counts. Last week's trial ended with a guilty verliberated for nearly four hours.

Nome District Attorney John Earthman was the state's prosecutor. Public defender Angela Green defended Smith. Nome Superior Court Judge Tim Dooley presided over the proceedings in a Kotzebue court-

Smith will be sentenced in April 2015.

Postal inspectors find drug shipment bound 58

By Sandra L. Medearis

for Nome market

He said he had expected diving equipment coming from Hawaii. However, when postal inspectors opened two packages addressed to Daniel Gilpin last June, they found marijuana and hashish, according to court documents filed in Anchorage and Nome. A motion by Gilpin to move the case to Nome Second District Court was granted and the case opened in Nome Nov. 19.

Gilpin, 44, has pleaded innocent to charges on three counts misconduct- controlled substance, fourth degree, and one count of misconduct -controlled substance, third degree—all Class B or Class C felony charges. Police say the marijuana and hashish had a combined street value of approximately $68,290, according to an affidavit signed by AST Curtis Vik.

On June 16, a postal inspector contacted Alaska State Trooper Curtis Vik to tell him two packages had been sent to the U.S. Postal Inspector's office after the USPS received a tip that the packages would contain drugs. The parcels had tape around the edges. Both parcels, with Gilpin's Nome address on them, came from Tom Little of Mountain View, Hawaii (Big Island). Investigators said no Tom Little had held the box number attributed to Tom

The packages had tracking numbers that would allow the sender and recipient to track their movement.

In the afternoon of June 16, USPI Damron and Vik phoned Gilpin about the parcels. Gilpin said he was expecting dive equipment from Hawaii and gave law enforcement consent to open the parcels. In both parcels, Damron and Vik found metal and plastic containers that had been closed with duct tape to prevent odors from escaping them, Vik said in his affidavit. In all the containers the investigators found several bags of a green leafy substance, which Vik recognized as marijuana, he said in the document. There was also a baggie in each of the parcels that contained what Vik recognized as hashish.

"One of the baggies appeared to be fairly wet, which is consistent with bubble hashish," Vik said in the affidavit in support of the complaint. "The other baggie appeared to have been dried and was the consistency of a soft wax. I tested both baggies for the presence of THC with field kits. Both baggies tested positive for the presence of THC."

Gilpin told investigators that he had a medical marijuana card-that the contents of the packages were his medicine, according to the court document. The marijuana weighed two pounds, 13.8 ounces. The hashish weighed 85.8 gross grams. The value of the marijuana sold in Nome would be approximately $64,000. The hashish would be valued at approximately $4,290.

Gilpin is out of jail on bail of $5,000. His next court appearance is slated for Dec. 30.

Saying it Sincerely

By Dan Ward, Nome Church of the Nazarene A member of the Nome Ministerial Association

I hope that you had a wonderful Thanksgiving, filled with family, friends, love, and plenty of your favorite foods. As you thought about the things in your life that you were thankful for, was this the year that the one big thing you had spent years praying for came to be? Or, have you finally given up hope God will answer that prayer?

In Luke chapter one we encounter a couple who had given up hope that God would ever answer their prayer for a son. Elizabeth and Zachariah had married with all of the excitement and expectations young people have when they get married. They would help each other through life, enjoy each other's company, and have lots of children; children who would ensure that the family name carried on, children who would take care of them in their old age. Now they are old, and that dream had faded long ago.

Then one day, as Zachariah was serving in the Temple, an angel appeared to him and said, "Zachariah, God has heard your prayers. Your wife Elizabeth will have a son ..." Zachariah answered the same way many of us would, "Do you expect me to believe this? I'm an old man and my wife is an old woman." And, for his unbelief, Zachariah was rendered unable to speak until their son was born.

Christmas is the season of hope. Luke begins his Christmas story by telling how God answered a long forgotten prayer

Are there prayers that you have given up hope of ever seeing an answer to? Are you struggling with the impossible?

Let me tell you about a friend of mine.

She was addicted to drugs, addicted to alcohol, and pregnant ... again, with what would be her seventh child. The other six had been taken away from her by the state. It was impossible that this baby would not be taken away too. She hated her life. She hated what the drugs and alcohol had made it become. But, they were the only things that dulled the pain. She had given up hope that things would ever be any better.

But, people were praying for her. After the baby was born, her neighbor came and invited her and the baby to church. She didn't want to go but she finally gave in. She expected that, when she walked into the church, everyone would take one look and know everything she had ever done. What she found instead was a church family of people who loved her, prayed for her, and encouraged her. She found forgiveness through the blood of Jesus and the power of the Holy Spirit helped her lead a new life. Today she is an excellent mother. The drugs and alcohol are gone. Her daughter is the delight of

Have you given up hope? Jesus is waiting. He offers hope, forgiveness, love, and a new life. Turn to him, and then find a church family to love and help you.

Kaatiluta celebration pays tribute to Alaska Native Heritage Month

By Keith Conger

Kaatiluta, one of Nome's largest community pot luck and dance celebrations of the year, was held Saturday evening at the Nome Recreation Center. "Kaatiluta stands for 'All of Us Together' in the King Island dialect," said event coordinator Moriah Sallaffie, who works for Kawerak's Beringia Center. "The main goal of the event is to bring the entire community together to celebrate our diverse culture.'

The event got its start three years ago as a way to commemorate Alaska Native and Native American Heritage Month. Sallaffie says, "Kaatiluta is a prime example of people and organizations coming together to support each other." She explained that although she might be the official coordinator, the event sort of ran itself. Kaatiluta's contributors came from nearly every aspect of Nome's community. "Lots of people came together to make this happen. What I really loved is that when people saw that we needed help, they rolled up their sleeves, and volun-

The potluck was coordinated by Marie Tozier, who works at the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus. Many delectable foods were presented, including salmon, halibut, fry bread, akutaq, beluga, blueberry delight, and a variety of caribou stews and soups. Chuck Fagerstrom of Sitnasuak Ñative Corporation helped procure the caribou meat.

The Nome Youth Facility helped set up chairs and tables at the event, and Nome-Beltz JROTC program members helped to serve food and took care of the clean up. Jennifer Thelen of the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve made fliers and also helped document the event through photographs. Kent Runion, a teacher at Nome-Beltz High School helped run a craft table for the smallest kids. One of the most generous sponsors was the Bering Sea Lions Club.

Marjorie Tahbone of Kawerak's Eskimo Heritage Program helped coordinate gift offerings for elders. She obtained many donations from local businesses around Nome. One of the items was shrink wrapped salmon from the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation that was distributed in Bering Strait Native Corporation berry buckets. Tahbone explained that this year, in lieu of a raffle, the grand prize of a round trip ticket on Bering Air was awarded to the elder with the most great, greatgrandchildren.

The post potluck celebration was started by the King Island Catholic Church Choir. They were followed by performances from both the King Island Drummers and Dancers and the Saint Lawrence Island Drummers and Dancers. One of the features of the entertainment was "The Third Grade Dancers." The dance performed by the young elementary school children was a product of collaboration between third grade teacher Elizabeth Korenek-Johnson and the King Island dance group.

Kaatiluta has attracted up to 400 people each year. Sallaffie explained that one of the best outcomes of the yearly gathering has been the formation of the Cultural Planners Group which includes representatives from around Nome. She says the group was created to keep individuals and organizations informed about different events that are hosted throughout the year.

The Kaatiluta event met all three goals of Native Heritage Month. According to the Alaska Native Heritage Month website these are; to educate and inform others of the diverse Alaska Native groups, their traditions, knowledge, ways of life, and contributions; to engage the community in Native dance, games, arts, stories, and other areas of tradition; and to encourage widespread community participation in the celebration of Alaska Natives and American Indi-

Although there have been various federal efforts since the early 1900s to pay tribute to the contributions of first Americans, the designation of a specific commemorative month first occurred in 1990 under a presidential proclamation by President George H.

Two Nome heroin dealers busted and charged

By Diana Haecker

In the first major heroin bust in Nome, Nome Police and Alaska State Troopers arrested two people dealing heroin in Nome

Yvonne Adkison, 22, and Kevin Beamish, 22 were arrested on Thursday, Dec. 4.

They made their first appearance in court on Friday afternoon. They were charged with dealing and possession of what authorities classify as a "schedule IA controlled substance," heroin in this case.

According to court documents, Yvonne Adkison is charged with two counts of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the second degree, "when she manufactured or delivered any amount of a schedule IA controlled substance or possessed any amount of a schedule IA controlled substance intending to manufacture or deliver."

Adkison was also charged with one count of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the fourth degree "when she possessed any amount of a schedule IA or IIA controlled substance."

Beamish was charged with four counts of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the second degree and four counts of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the fourth degree. The charges stem from selling heroin and possessing heroin, on dates that go back to January 15, Beamish and Adkison were brought into the courtroom on Friday at 1:30 p.m. with several other prisoners.

Adkison's boyfriend Juston Cook of Kentucky, who worked with Adkison on the gold dredge "Wild Ranger" owned by Vernon Adkison, was also one of the prisoners. Cook and Adkison are also featured in the Discovery Channel reality show "Bering Sea Gold."

Cook is charged with driving without a valid driver's license.

According to affidavits to support the charges, an undercover Western Alaska Narcotics Team trooper described the particulars of the almost year-long investigation that began in January 2014.

The trooper had received information that Kevin Beamish Jr. is using and selling cocaine and heroin in Nome. Under cover, the trooper began buying so-called "niffs" of heroin from Beamish. A niff is one tenth of a gram, or a single dose of heroin.

The undercover agent paid $200 for the niffs. The agent described another purchase made on January 16. "I gave Beamish $100 for a niff of heroin. He returned to the Crowley

The City of Nome needs more revenue. Where will we get it? We already have a sales tax. We already have property tax. Perhaps we could sell more business licenses. Maybe we could cut down on the number of consultants and paid advisors, but that is not a predictable savings. Cut salaries? Cut benefits? Not a good move. Help from the state? Don't count on it. Taxing aircraft? Heck, they could just land outside the city limits. Not a good idea.

Where do we provide services? Nome is a distribution hub. Everyone has to come to town to pick up mail, get groceries, water, fuel oil, propane and gasoline. Nome's fire and ambulance services respond to emergencies beyond the city limits. Nome Joint Utilities provides power several miles beyond the city limits. Nome City Schools provide service to families living out of town. We also have many gold mining operations outside of town. Maybe it is time to consider expanding our city limits to include the areas inside our service footprint. This will not be a popular move for folks who live outside the city limits. They will have to pay property tax. They won't like it, but the rate can be much lower than downtown city property that is on sewer and water

There are benefits to an expanded city boundary. Not only will there be more much needed revenue, but also these new Nomeites will be able to vote in the municipal elections and also run for office. This will save us from the disgrace of uncontested elections. It's time for expansion to be on the table again. We have done it before. -N.L.M.-

Young seal takes wrong turn

By Diana Haecker

An unusual visitor tried to make its way to downtown Nome on Thursday night. Luckily it was diverted from getting into trouble and was guided back to his natural habi-

A young spotted seal exited the frozen Nome harbor via the east boat ramp and continued to River Street. A few good Samaritans found the animal in the street heading toward Front Street. The Nome Police Department was notified and called Marine Advisory Program agent and Marine Mammal stranding network responder Gay Sheffield. Upon her arrival, she found the seal just west of the NJUS water treatment plant. "It was a young spotted seal, healthy, energetic and chubby," Sheffield said.

The seal was temporarily restrained, placed in a waterproof bag and skidded about 100 yards to open water at Middle Beach. There, the animal was released and entered the water with a feisty good-bye hiss.

'Sometimes everybody needs a helping hand," said Sheffield, commenting that this young animal got a little lost in town and just needed some help to find open water again.

If you see marine wildlife in distress, or heading into town, please contact the Nome Police Department, UAF Marine Advisory Program or the Kawerak Subsistence

Fire destroys Kivalina store

In the middle of the night of Dec. 5, a fire destroyed the Kivalina Native Store, the only store of the village. By the time firefighters arrived, the entire building was engulfed in flames, ADN reports, and the building could not be saved.

One firefighter was sent out for treatment after inhaling flame retar-

No other injuries were reported. However, with the entire inventory of the store burned in the flames, the village is left without supplies other than in residents' pantries. Northwest Arctic Borough, NANA, Maniilaq and school district leaders organized a response to fly goods to the village north of Kotzebue.

KNOM reports that Bering Air also flies donations to Kivalina free of charge.

NOAA retracts draft on critical habitat for ringed

Although it was not made known to the press, NOAA on their website announced that they inadvertently placed a wrong draft version of the proposed rule to designate Arctic ringed seal critical habitat to the Federal Register.

Arctic ringed seals were listed as threatened in 2013 under the Endangered Species Act and the designation of critical habitat is required for species listed under the ESA.

According to NOAA spokeswoman Julie Speegle this version includes language clarifying our understanding of the Arctic habitat, asking for public comment, and clarifying process. For instance, in the preamble NMFS included language to provide the public with information on Essential Fish Habitat for ringed seal prey species Arctic cod and saffron cod and their geographic distribution. NMFS added a specific request for public comment on the northern boundary of physical and biological features essential to the conservation of the ringed seal, noting that data are particularly limited regarding this aspect of the proposed critical habitat delineation. NMFS added language that clarifies our understanding of the environmental conditions in which oil and gas drilling takes place in the Arctic. NMFS included language discussing land fast ice in very shallow areas and information suggesting such ice is less important for ringed seals than sea ice in deeper waters. NMFS included language clarifying how NMFS would evaluate the effects of proposed federal actions on critical habitat during ESA section 7 consultations, given the seasonal presence of essential critical habitat features or seasonal use of critical habitat by ringed seals. NMFS added language clarifying our approach to periodic regulatory review.

In the proposed regulatory text, NMFS made one change to the essential features of critical habitat, excluding bottom-fast ice in shallow

Noble pleads guilty to eight environmental charges

The US Attorney's office in Anchorage announced Monday that Noble Drilling pleaded guilty to eight felony charges, breaking international and U.S. law when they operated the drill rigs Noble Discoverer and the Kulluk during Shell's 2012 exploration campaigns in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas.

Noble Drilling was a subcontractor for Shell. According to KTUU, Noble admitted falsifying data entries about collection, storage and disposal of oil, willfully failing to notify the U.S. Coast Guard of hazardous conditions aboard the drill rig Noble Discoverer, failing to maintain an accurate oil record book and oil pollution prevention certificate and failing to maintain a ballast water record book. Noble entered a plea deal with the federal prosecutors and agreed to pay a $12.2 million fines and community service payments. The company is also put on corporate probation for four years.

Report documents northern Alaska industry infrastruc-

A recently released report from the University of Alaska Fairbanks offers the first holistic picture of current and planned oil and gas industry infrastructure throughout northern

"This report contributes to the factual basis needed for informed deliberations about commercial and resource development activity in the Arctic," said Kevin Hillmer-Pegram, a doctoral student at UAF and author of the report. "Understanding how much infrastructure and commercial activity there is on the landscapes and seascapes of northern Alaska, how much there could plausibly be in the relatively near future, and where it occurs will help people internalize what Arctic industrialization means to them."

The report offers a comprehensive way for the layperson to understand oil and gas infrastructure in the state, according to Amy Lovecraft, a UAF professor, Hillmer-Pegram's advisor and co-director of the North by 2020 Forum at UAF, which spearheaded the development of the report. It will serve as a resource for local and state elected officials and policymakers, businesses and agencies.

'It provides an unbiased starting point for anybody who is interested in understanding the current state of affairs and the future development of oil and gas projects," said Lovecraft. "It doesn't matter whether you are pro or against development, it's important to think of the primary, secondary and tertiary effects."

The report divides northern Alaska into regions and provides information about existing, planned and proposed oil and gas and commercial transportation infrastructure in each region. In addition, it provides an overview of the history, current conditions and plausible future extent of industrial infrastructure in the state. That future development include extensive increases in a wide variety of infrastructure, including structures, wells, roads and pipelines.

Port commission tackles new tariff for summer 2015

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Port Commission has its tariff on the table to revise rules and requirements for vessel owners using the harbor in the oncoming season.

They are also looking at the fee structure for docking storage and loading and unloading.

The panel wants to have the document before the public for comment in Februar

They want the information ready to give vessel owners heads up on rule changes and plenty of time to meet requirements before the shipping season begins.

At a Dec. 4 work session, the big issue of whether to raise the fees came up right off the bat, with a split in sentiment among commissioners.

Much of the discussion is in the early stages and drew from a memo contracted from Northern Economics in February that said some fees should go up by as much as 150 percent, but in increments.

Commissioners considered boosting the fees by enough to set aside a savings account for heavy repairs and capital replacement of some of the facilities 15 to 20 years down the road. The level of grant funding in the future could play a significant role in the plans.

"Assuming a high level of capital replacement costs and low grant funding, the analysis suggest that the Port of Nome would need to double its current rates and adopt a regular rate increase linked to inflation," Mike Fisher of Northern Economic said in his report. Bump up the fees significantly to cover maintenance, depreciation, and a heavy fund balance but divide the increases over three seasons, the consultant advised.

The report has come to the commission worktable over several years as a tool for backing an increase.

Having the report "has been a good exercise for us, but I'm not sure how realistic it is," City Manager Josie Bahnke said. She would like to see a three-year funding plan to raise money that would give stability in port budgeting.

Commissioners want to find a happy medium to keep port finances healthy for the next 20 years without impacting the region's economy negatively.

The port has to garner enough revenue for port operation and also be able to set aside enough money for large structure repairs and expansion, but "we have to do it carefully, " Joy Baker, port project manager, said.

Commissioner Iura Leahu emphasized the need to set aside a rainy day account, which the port does not have, he said. It would be to the port's advantage to have a fallback but also to show businesses considering use of the port to see that the City was solidly taking care of business, that there would be a well-functioning port in the long run. The Commission could have the Council approve opening a capital account which would show a good economics point of view, a smart political move and would benefit use of the port.

The port would have Band-Aid fixes over the next 20 years and continually play catch-up if the City were not able to have a replacement fund, Commissioner Charley Lean observed.

What happens if we have a 100-year storm and it blows out the sheet piling?" Lean asked.

Once the port gets the Middle Dock project finished, the City can step back and increase the bank account, Lean said.

"People say we are greedy and don't nee a bank account. Those are people who don't know how to manage their own money," Lean declared. "I don't think we can raise the rates by much. There is going to be a hue and cry from the Council if we raise them too high."

The Port Commission is an advisory group whose actions have to be ratified by the Nome Common Council.

money—how much the contracts would cost over the current packages and where the money was coming from.

The City has a budget deficit of $800,000—eased by a recent sale of surplus property for $400,000—and Nome Joint Utility System has taken an emergency $2.2 million credit line from the City to meet a cash flow crisis.

It was the Council exercising due diligence to let people know where increased labor costs would come from and the mechanics each employer had for getting the money for increases.

"I think the contracts are more than fair, I just want to see the numbers," Culley said.

He noted that he could not bridge the difference between what NJUS said their contracts would cost per year—$67,000— and what the City cost per year—$150,000—on their contracts.

City Manager Josie Bahnke told the Council the information had "been out there" and provided to the Council in executive sessions.

"We have been going through the process and bringing you up to date," Bahnke told the Council.

Councilman Jerald Brown felt that the unions should not be penalized for lack of information provided the Council, the arena for that correction was manager evaluations.

Sparks consistently voted "no" on postponing a vote on contracts because, he said, he wanted to support the public employees.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz felt that the Council had received information along the way during negotiations and wanted to get the contracts approved.

Sentiments on the labor contract issue broke 3-3. Mayor Denise Bahnke was not present to vote to break the tie. Issues before the Council need four votes for passage.

In other business, the Council turned down, for now, a measure to remove from aircraft an exemption from personal property tax.

Jim Hickerson of Hageland Aviation and Ravn air commuter companies said there was not enough information on what the tax structure would look like, that aircraft owners and the City people should sit down and hash it out.

Simple, Bahnke responded, it would be personal property tax on the true value of airplanes.

The Council passed a resolution awarding the bids from the Dec. 4 City of Nome surplus real property auction. The City received bids on 16 of 31 lots up for sale. University of Alaska bid and received 15 lots; Pat Hahn bid and received a lot at 215 West D Street where the Gologergen house stood before abatement. The minimum bid was set at $6,500; Hahn bid $10,500. The college bid generally $1,000—$2,000 over the minimum for their lots. Fifteen lots went unsold.

Realtor Melissa Ford told the Council that next time they needed to publicize the sale better and passed the Council a rate sheet.

The City had advertised the sale in the newspaper and had provided bid packages, Bahnke said.

Following a work session late last month with Rep. Neal Foster and Sen. Donny Olson, the Council approved their federal and state legislative priority list.

But before the question came to a vote, John Handeland noted recent drug busts and asked for that issue to get a place on both lists. He proposed that lists be amended to show the community's emphasis on drug education, drug awareness, and drug and alcohol treatment facility.

With the drug concern added, the Council approved the legislative priority lists. Other priorities on the state list were in order, water and sewer infrastructure improvements, $4.3 million; Nome road improvements, $3 million; Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. pumper truck, $600,000; Nome Seawall Repair, $500,000 and Arctic deep draft port and Nome causeway expansion.

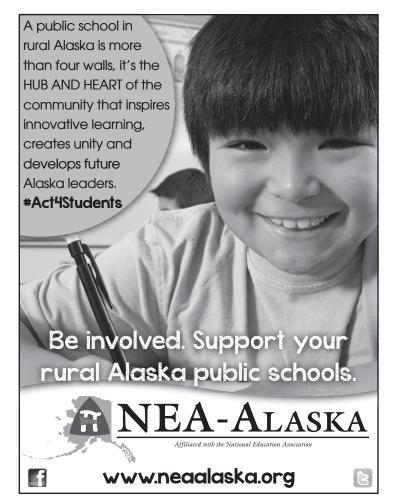

The Council also thumbed the drum for Nome schools priority projects—district-wide lighting replacements, $267,165, Nome Elementary School gym floor replacement cost recovery, $107692, and Nome-Beltz Campus electrical work, $650,000.

The City also listed utility work "worth of advocacy:" raising the Power Cost Equalization cap on number of kilowatt hours, money for a utility, public works and emergency response equipment building and acquisition of a piece of Nome Airport property.

And included on the federal legislative priorities list: Arctic deep draft port and Nome causeway expansion, Acquisition of USAF West Nome Tank Farm property and Block 20(see related story this paper), Nome Airport; community power generation issues—development of alternative energy sources including geothermal and energy storage technology, power distribution upgrades, and enhanced energy storage, extension of Steadman Street, water and sewer infrastructure, USCG seasonal forward operating location in Nome and other arctic marine projects.

The transfer of the USAF tank farm to Nome at no cost was an item in a transportation bill currently before Congress, and chances of that dream coming true for Nome was looking good, Bahnke told the Council gasoline pumps at approximately 17:39 hours [5:39 p.m.] with the niff of heroin. I got into the passenger seat of his vehicle, he handed me two niffs and told me to pick one. Beamish told me the other niff was for the guy that was sitting in a Mitsubishi Montero near the pump house at the gas station," reads the affidavit.

The City needs the land for Port of Nome expansion. The issue has traveled between the front and back burners for years, pending contaminant abatement and legislative action.

The agent bought two more niffs in February. "Each time Beamish would have to collect the money from me for the purchase of the drugs and then go to his source of supply to get the drugs," wrote the trooper.

The trooper submitted the substances to the Alaska Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory and forensic scientists confirmed that the substances, indeed, were heroin.

Beamish continued to contact the undercover agent by text messages and inquired if he needed drugs.

On December 2, the agent sent a text to Beamish and asked to buy more "brown" - street talk for heroin.

Beamish said there has not been any product in town for four days but on Dec. 3, there was supposed to be a delivery.

On Dec. 4, Beamish called the undercover agent and said the heroin made it to town. This time, the price was $120 per niff. "Beamish told me he couldn't wait until he got some because his back was hurting him," the affidavit said. After several detours, the undercover agent drove Beamish near the stash house, and received two tin-foil packets containing a brown tar-like substance, heroin.

That day, on Dec. 4, Alaska State Troopers Western Alcohol and Narcotics Team, Nome AST Patrol, and the Nome Police Department with the K9 Icon executed a search warrant on Adkison's Nome residence for suspected heroin sales. An officer went to her rented residence at 405 East Kings Place for suspected sale and possession of controlled substances. A surveillance team watched the house and found that people arrived and left the house within minutes, "which is consistent with drug activity," a court affidavit says.

The search warrant was executed and the officers found a zip-lock bag containing an 8-gram ball of heroin in the house, worth about $19,000; 29 individually tin-foil wrapped niffs weighing 1/10 of a gram each with a street worth of $3,480; a digital scale coated with brown residue and also $1,840 in cash, including the $240 in $20-dollar bills that were prerecorded by the undercover WAANT trooper.

When the officers entered the residence, Juston Cook was inside and stated he was Adkison's boyfriend.

"Cook said that Yvonne sold at least one prescription pill and two tinfoil balls of heroin to individuals that came by the residence on 12-4-14," states the affidavit. "Cook further stated that he had observed Yvonne sell heroin to individuals on more than one occasion in the past and said that when Yvonne left the residence, she took an unknown amount of heroin with her."

That same day, the undercover agent bought two niffs from Beamish. The surveillance team observed Beamish enter Adkison's house and shortly thereafter deliver the niffs to the undercover agent's truck, leaving them on the driver seat.

Beamish was arrested on Dec. 4 at 9:30 p.m.

In their court appearance on Friday, Adkison and Beamish both stated to presiding Magistrate Judge Bob Lewis that they do not have the financial means to hire a lawyer and were appointed a public defender. District Attorney John Earthman pointed out that Adkison was higher in the drug chain than Beamish and asked for $40,000 bail and a third party custodian. Magistrate Judge Lewis said that the allegations include that Ms. Adkison was traveling between Nome and Anchorage and by this method the drugs were brought into Nome. Lewis ordered a cash performance bond of $30,000.

If bail was to be posted, Adkison would have to return to court for the judge to establish the conditions of release. Lewis set bail at a $20,000 cash performance bond. If bail were posted, the court would set the conditions of release. "This set of charges is extraordinarily serious," said Lewis.

The defendants did not enter a plea. Their next preliminary hearing date is set for Dec. 15 at 1:30 p.m.

This marks the first major heroin bust in Nome, in recent history.

According to Nome Police Chief John Papasodora, there is a current investigation still ongoing. In an email correspondence with the Nome Nugget Chief Papasodora said that this "is just the first step along a long journey where many will find that they are not as anonymous as they believe.'

Asked about the pervasiveness of the drug heroin in town, Papasodora confirmed that heroin use is very high in the community. "We have not seen any deaths associated with heroin to date, but it is a particularly potent drug and I would imagine at some point, that we may see fatalities involved with heroin use," Papasodora wrote.

According to the police chief, heroin has resurged and is widely used in the lower 48 states, where it is plentiful and cheap. Many users are turning to heroin as it can be smoked, injected or swallowed. Papasodora said that heroin is a powerful depressant. "One of the key indicators is someone who is having a hard time staying focused; sleepy; or in a major mellow funk," he

Economically, heroin adds another layer of problems. While it might be cheap in the contiguous states, drugs are more expensive in Western Alaska. "Drug dealers can reap huge profits in Western Alaska as the demand for substances is always high, and the disposable incomes for many support drug use,' Chief Papasodora wrote. "Money diverted to drugs is money that is not being used to support families and I'm fairly certain most drug dealers are not paying sales tax to help support city services.'

To sustain the heroin addiction, Papasodora said that users "trade themselves (sexual favors) for drugs" and steal. "It is not uncommon to find stolen property: guns; jewelry; money; electronics; etc.

• Port

crease and a large fee increase, trying to match port revenues against port expenses and a healthy fund balance and at the same time trying not to tee off commerce coming across the causeway and into the harbor. At the same time, port bosses have to provide for a balloon payment of approximately $634,000 for causeway construction coming due to NOAA in 2017, according to City Manager Josie Bahnke.

The Commission raised some rates April 2014, but did not touch the following costs: cargo in and out, fuel transfer in and out or over the side to other vessels for distribution, or the price of gravel business in various amounts—less than 2 tons per barge, more than 2 tons per barge, and less than 40 tons per project.

Before them on the table, the commissioners had several documents showing revenues and expenses over the years. The port's biggest growth is coming from leases and storage, not cargo and fuel, which are stable, Lean observed. On leases and storage, a lot has to do with the large mining barges coming in, Lean said.

The difference between lease and storage is length of time—storage is for seasonal and leases can be a contract for three, four or five years. Some increase in revenue has resulted from a spreadsheet column switch when some storage converted from storage to leases.

Commissioners conceded that the current rush to find gold offshore had raised harbor dock permits over the past three years with the increased number of offshore gold dredges. The number of docking permits has doubled and more since 2011, with total dockings going from 271 in 2011 to the mid 400 range.

Some port revenue reflects the larger revenue picture in the region. Gravel going across the port is dependent on state and federal grants to other places, like Norton Sound villages, for projects. With the current decrease in money coming in from federal and state sources and the state Legislature battling a $3billion-deficit from collapsing oil prices, commissioners did not see an increase in revenues from project gravel.

However, with dockage and fuel being large pieces of the revenue pie chart, just a modest increase could make a difference, Commissioner Mike Sloan observed.

Another document, a tariff comparison worksheet, showed fees currently charged at other western Alaska ports. For bringing in general cargo, fuel and gravel, Port of Nome had lower and higher figures for set amounts Commissioner Rolland Trowbridge made a point that comparing Port of Nome with other western ports was difficult. Other ports make their money in different ways than Nome's port; the ports in Dillingham and Dutch Harbor make money on fish coming across the docks and have different seasons.

"For us to make comparisons with others that are getting revenue from another source is not fair, he said. "They can keep their numbers low. We are seeing part of the picture. That skews the picture."

"If they were to plop their port in our area and take away the fish, they're rates would be higher," Trowbridge said, adding that Bristol Bay, Dillingham and Dutch Harbor operate their ports year around whereas freezing weather limits Nome to about a six month season.

The commission will continue to study fees and tariff at their next regular meeting in January.

At the work session, the commission got halfway through the tariffs before disbanding to continue fine-combing it early next year.

Once the 2015 tariff has been adopted, the Commission intends to make copies of the documents available with a signature page tear-off to make sure port users know the tariff and acknowledge responsibility for the contents.

"There is a lot of confusion on how the port operates, even among operators," Trowbridge said.

The panel has considered reducing the insurance requirement for smaller craft and rejected the idea.

He gets questions like, "Why do I have to have $1.5 million in insurance when I have a 12-foot Lund with a 10 h.p. motor on it?" Harbormaster Lucas Stotts told the Commission.

Even small craft could damage infrastructure and other more expensive vessels, reasoned Commissioner Rolland Trowbridge. How about when "it catches fire and damages the boat next to it?" Trowbridge said.

The commission also discussed the need for workers retained by vessel owners to operate heavy equipment to provide proof of liability insurance on the equipment.

"What is the certification of people operating a crane?" Stotts asked. "There are a lot more crane operations with the big dredges."

The Commission also discussed modifying language on impounding boats and other equipment for non-payment and abandonment.

"I'm seeing more and more trailers, inflatables and mining equipment abandoned," Stotts said.

Also up for discussion was affirming the 5 mph speed limit in the inner harbor. Fishers stretching nets across the small boat harbor also gave the Commission heartburn. "It's an accident waiting to happen," Stotts told the Commission.

The Commission and harbor administration reaffirmed a determination to have no boats in the water at freeze-up. The port has authority to make the facility off-limits to those who do not respect the rules, Joy Baker, port projects director said.

"If someone is being irresponsible with a vessel and allows it to freeze in, we need to protect the environment and the facility," she declared

Stotts had news from the U.S. Coast Guard wanting to know how the Port of Nome would be regulating "weird craft." The USCG had made it plain they would not regulate it

"We need standards," Stotts said, referring to rag-tag homemade inventions.

"We need to get with the state Dept. of Natural Resources to see what their standards are," Bahnke, city manager and port director said.

Lean piped up on the issue.

"I find it objectionable that a commercial fisherman has to have insurance, certificates, follow rules," but someone with a motor hanging over, no bilge, no safety equipment could operate, he said.

Trowbridge favored treating dredges as commercial vessels and requiring them to operate under commercial USCG rules.

"I don't think a single dredge would pass a commercial inspection," Stotts said, saying again that the USCG would not cover homemade vessels.

The Commission will have more sessions next month to pull decisions out of the discussion stage.

finding an interim and then a permanent replacement for Gast. Board president Betsy Brennan summarized the board's wishes as to the immediate future. "We will find someone [internally] to steer the ship for a short time, then decide if we will concentrate our search locally, or extend it," Brennan said.

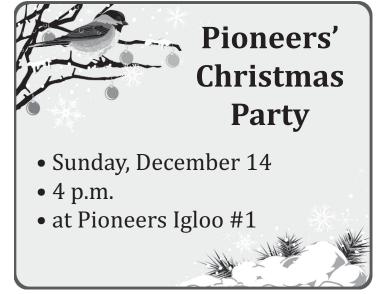

All members agreed that they need a point person right away, and that it would benefit the district to have a local person in the role of superintendent. "I want to assure the community and our staff that we have wonderful people here, at all our schools," said Brennan. "Our staff is doing great things with the kids, and as a board we will get working and make the transition go well."

In other school board news:

- The board recognized the Bering Sea Lions Club with a Partner in Education Award for their very generous donation to the schools' child nutrition program. Lions Club president Kevin Knowlton accepted the award. "We tend to do things in the shadow a lot, we like to do small things to help the community and the region," Knowlton said.
- Nome Elementary principal Paul Clark told board members that a reworked attendance letter had gone home to some households, the flavor of which is to encourage kids to come to school. Clark added that attendance rates are actually up by one student compared to last year. Nome Eskimo's after school tutoring sessions are averaging 12 kids in grades three through six. In January students in kindergarten through second grade will have access to afterschool skills sessions a couple days a week.
- Nome-Beltz Principal Harlan Heinrich introduced November's students of the month. The junior high recognized Marilena Koozaata;

the high school staff chose Anna Marie Motis. The enrollment at Nome-Beltz is 248 students, Heinrich told the board, but the average number of students who ate breakfast in November averaged 131, which was down from October. Lunch numbers have also decreased, from 191 to 151. "I would expect more participation than that, with the free food program," Heinrich said, "but it takes a while to get the kids through the line some days."

- Heinrich added that there have been a lot of absences, staff included, due to sicknesses going around. Nome-Beltz is going to try something new this year: finals will happen the week before Christmas break. "We thought that would be more productive than to have them after a two-week break," Heinrich explained. "To make it more meaningful to the kids, the teachers will create some independent learning plans for the kids so they can see where they're at and perhaps bolster their score by doing some work over the break and have it count before semester's end in January."
- Student board representative Jane Tidwell shared some Beltz happenings with the board, including that the volleyball team had finished second in region at state; the student council held a canned food drive just before Thanksgiving; some students had been participating in the annual NaNoWriMo (National Novel Writing Month) "write-ins;" and James Jorgenson and Jadyn Otton were selected to attend all state choir. Otton was also chosen to participate in the All-Northwest Music Festival, held in Portland in February.
- Board member Barb Amarok reiterated her desire to connect with families who had decided to send their children to Mt. Edgecumbe High School in Sitka in an effort to find out what prompted that choice over keeping their children at Nome-Beltz.

The Nome Community Chorus performs Messiah

By Keith Conger

Nome residents were treated with uplifting holiday concerts last Friday night and Sunday afternoon at the Nome Lutheran Church. The Nome

Community Chorus, which is comprised of 29 fine Nome singers, started each performance with six Christmas arrangements. These were followed by five selections from George Frederic Handel's Mes-

The choir was conducted by Rachel Schweissing who was also in charge of the holiday concert in 2013. She has lived in Nome since 2012. While Schweissing has an extensive musical background, including teaching high school choir in Billings, Montana, the holiday performances the past two years have been her first attempts at conducting something this large.

"Once you get a group this talented," explained Schweissing after the weekend presentations, "the job is less in keeping time, and the job becomes more doing lots of cues." She stated a big part of her task was to help portray the feeling and overall mood of the works.

Handel's complicated arrangements provided plenty of chances for Schweissing to practice her cueing skills. The performance schedule also provided the conductor with the opportunity to direct individual performances each night. The chorus backed up Jackie Reader as she sang a solo before a packed house on Friday, and Andrea Irrigoo sang her solo on Sunday afternoon.

Schweissing conducted a women's ensemble made up of members Elizabeth Coler, Carol Hobbs, Elsa Hobbs, Lindsay Johnson, Kristin Leffler, and Irrigoo. Johnson performed a solo during the ensemble. She also performed two Christmas songs in a quartet with Reader, David Dodman, and Ron Horner.

The events were sponsored by the Nome Arts Council, which was instrumental in bringing in Jamila Hla Shwe to do piano accompaniment for the chorus. Shwe, who was born and raised in Prague, Czech Republic. holds a bachelor's degree in piano performance with the Prague Conservatory of Music. She has performed throughout Europe, the USA, and Sri Lanka, as well as in Zimbabwe and South Africa. Hla worked for two seasons with the Anchorage Opera, and currently teaches piano at the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

Longtime chorus member Mary Reader performed with the group at its first holiday concert in 1993. She says the Messiah was presented regularly in Nome throughout the 1990s. For many years the chorus was conducted by LaVonne Okleasik. The performances conducted by Schweissing the past two years have revived the musical staple of Nome's holiday season after quite a few years absence.

Handel's Messiah was originally offered as an Easter concert in Dublin, Ireland on April 13, 1742, but now is considered a worldwide fixture of the Christmas season. Handel wrote his extended masterpiece in somewhere between three and four weeks. The Nome Community Chorus adapted the lengthy work so it could fit into short evening performances. Schweissing explained the dedicated chorus began practicing for this year's performance in late September, meeting each Monday for two hours.

Rounding out the chorus were Maya Coler, Amanda Meppen, Peter Bente, George Sonray, Wendell Downs, Lloyd Perrigo, John Peterson, Bryan Weyauvanna, Josephine Bourdon, Laura Davis Collins, Courtney Cousins, Linda Downs, Gretchen Froehle, Carol Gales, Sophia Hobbs, Brodie Kimmel, Kristin Leffler, Karen Sonray, Jannelle Trowbridge, and Sarah Weaver.

Seven Nanooks, three BSSD wrestlers qualify for state meet

By Keith Conger

Nome Results

While Kotzebue continued its 2014 wrestling domination in the team standings, Nome made a strong statement by placing second at the Northern Conference Tournament in Kotzebue last weekend. Kotzebue's team score of 319.5 was a full one hundred points higher than the 219.5 accumulated by the Nanooks. Nome traded places in the standings with Barrow, who had beaten the Nanooks at the conference meet in 2013. Barrow's score of 186 points placed them third in the tournament.

The Northern Conference allows two wrestlers from each weight classification to advance to the state tournament. According Trackwrestling.com, Kotzebue entered 21 wrestlers and was able to place first or second in 12 of the 15 weight classifications. Their 98pound wrestler went unopposed. They did not have entries in the 106 pound and 285 pound divisions.

Nome brought 15 wrestlers, seven of whom qualified for competition in Anchorage next weekend. Barrow had three more wrestlers than Nomeand five qualified for state.

Nome was led by defending state champion senior Emery Booshu who was crowned tournament champion at the 145 pound classification. Booshu recorded two falls en route to the championship match. His first pin was over Selawik's Rawl McCoy in 51 seconds. He followed that up with a semi-final match pin of teammate Tim James in 1 minute 53 sec-

Booshu met up with former state champion Gary Eakin of Kotzebue in the final bout. Booshu was able to shut out his long time rival with a 3-0 decision. He and Eakin will compete against each other again next weekend.

Leif Erikson, Nome's other defending state champion, won the 138 pound classification. Erikson, a junior, won his first match over Kiana's Seth Morris by a pin in 9 seconds. He followed that up with a 2 minute ,27 second pin of Kotzebue's Jack Hyatt and a 18-2 technical fall victory over Anthony Andrews of Saint Michaels.

Erikson's opponent in the championship match was teammate senior Jason Gilder, who had advanced with back to back falls in rounds two and three. Gilder was able to pin Gambell's Spencer Fackler in 1 minute, 8 seconds, and Harry Baldwin of Kotzebue in 1 minute 32 seconds. He lost to Erikson in the championship match in a technical fall, 16-1. The 1-2 finish by the Nome pair prevented Kotzebue from advancing a wrestler in the 138 pound class.

Another Nome wrestler finishing up his west coast career with a trip to the state meet is senior Oliver Hoogendorn. He placed second in the 182 pound classification. Hoogendorn recorded falls over Buckland's Thomas Bradley in 1 minute, 35 seconds, and Kotzebue's Louis Edenshaw in 2 minutes, 35 seconds. He was beaten in the championship match by defending state voted the meet's outstanding wrestler.

The Nanooks third conference champion was senior Joe Cross who won the 160 pound weight class. He did not wrestle in 2013 due to injury. Cross beat Kotzebue wrestlers Gus Nelson in a 12-5 decision, and Ben Phillips in a 8-5 decision en route to Rounding out Nome's state qualifiers were Nolan Horner and his brother James who each placed second. Nolan, who weighted in at 184 pounds, was wrestling in the 195 pound division to avoid the crowd at 182. He pinned Barrow's Matthew Brower in 1 minute, 53 seconds, and won by a 15-1 major decision over Gambell's Tayor Apangalook, before bowing out to Drew Nanouk of Kotzebue. James Horner lost to Kotzebue's Spencer Woods in his championship match of the 152 pound classification.

Senior Gabe Smith had the unfortunate task of wrestling in one of the most competitive weight classes the 145 pound class. Smith beat Tyrone Coffin of Noorvik in a 22-10 major decision before meeting up with Eakin. Smith earned third Senior Josh Gologergen finished his wrestling career by placing third in the 170 pound class. Gologergen pinned Rudy Mike of Stebbins in 53 seconds, and won by a 16-2 major decision over Barrow's Jazzmer Moreno in the third place match. He just missed qualifying for state by losing the second place match to Sikulik Johnson of Unalakleet in a 6-5 decision.

Another Nome wrestler taking third place was John Tidwell in the 152 pound classification. Tidwell won by a 10-1 major decision over Tyler Farless of Barrow before being pinned by teammate James Horner in 2 minutes, 40 seconds in the semifinal match.

Three Nome wrestlers took fourth place in their divisions: Timothy James in the 145 pound class; Ethan Kelso in the 152 pound class; and Zac Tozier in the 220 pound class. Orlin Gologergen and Donald Smith also competed for Nome.

Nome-Beltz coach Dudley Homelvig said he was able to enter more than one wrestler at several classifications. He was really pleased with how well the second and third Nanook wrestlers in these categories did for the team. The extra points scored by those wrestlers helped the team secure second place.

BSSD Results

Eight Bering Strait School District teams sent a total of 24 wrestlers to the Western Conference Tournament. The Gambell squad topped the group by bringing four boys and two girls to compete. They were the highest scoring BSSD team with a total of 43 points. This helped them earn fourth place overall, and first place among small schools.

The BSSD had three wrestlers qualify for next week's state tournament. Shaktoolik's Everson Pachampion Josh Roetman, who was niptchuk took second place in the 113 pound category. St. Michaels' Josh Fitka earned a second place finish in the 106 pound classification, while Unalakleet's Johnson was the runner up in the 170 pound division.

Elim's top finisher was Nathan Saccheus who took fourth place in the 132 pound weight class. Gambell had a trio of third place finishers: Leonard Apangalook in the 120 pound class, Andrew Aningayou in the 126 pound class, and Taylor Apangalook in the 195 pound class. Stebbins' top finisher was Rudy Mike, who made it to the semi-final match of the consolation round.

Koyuk's top finisher was Tristan Douglas who took fourth place in the 160 pound weight class.

Girls Tournament

The 2014 State Wrestling Championships sponsored by the Alaska School Activities Association will feature a first ever girls wrestling division. According to Homelvig, the winning girl from each conference's weight class advances to the state tournament. In each classification that has four girls, there will be a bracket format. If there are less than four girls in a class, a round robin configuration will take place.

Shishmaref sent two girls to wrestle at the Northern Conference Tournament. Augustine Olanna took fourth place in the 120 pound girls class, while her teammate Sarah Ningeulook earned fourth place in the 145 pound division. Gambell also had two girls entered in the meet. Tanisha Slwooko placed third in the 160 pound division while her teammate Junelle Apassingok worked her way up to the third match of the consolation round.

Unalakleet, Golovin place first and second at Mixed-6 tourney, advance to state

By Keith Conger

In the early 1970's boxing titans Muhammad Ali and George Frazier took part in a series of bouts that thrilled the world. Each contest was a hard fought, back and forth battle with the boxers trading victories.

A modern day version of the classic Ali versus Frasier matches played out on the volleyball courts at the 2014 Western Conference Mixed-6 Volleyball Tournament this past weekend. According to longtime Bering Strait School District athletics director Jeff Erickson, the coed volleyball teams from Golovin and Unalakleet have taken first and second place in the conference tournament 10 of the last 11 years.

The Golovin Lynx were the number one seed entering the 2014 event, sporting a 10-1 BSSD record. Their only loss occurred in a five set match against Unalakleet on November 8. Fittingly, the Unalakleet Wolfpack concluded its regular season in second place with a 9-1 record, their only defeat coming at the hands the Lynx in another thrilling five set match on November 22.

The yearly tradition continued with a rubber match between the two powerhouses in the championship finals at the Shaktoolik High School gym Saturday night. Although the Lynx were not able to take the lead early in the first set, they were able to keep Unalakleet from building more than a two point margin. Down 12 – 14, junior Peter Olson ignited a Lynx run with two kill shots and a perfectly placed tip. Junior Molly Moses added a service ace, and suddenly Golovin had their first lead at Unalakleet responded as junior Talon Erickson delivered an ace of his own. The Wolfpack reestablished a lead they would not relinquish. Erickson also provided the final blow with a block at set point, giving his team a 25-21 win.

Senior Gage Ivanoff kept the momentum up early in the second set for Unalakleet with a block and then a kill shot as the Wolfpack jumped out to a 4-1 lead. Subsequently, two kills shots, and a pair of service aces by Olson helped the Lynx capture their first lead of the set at 8-7.

At that point, Moses stepped to the service line, trying to keep her team's momentum. Five of her nine serves were aces. Suddenly the Lynx had built a 10 point lead. A kill, an ace, and a block by junior Hank Henry were all Golovin needed to finish the set with 25-14 win.

The Wolfpack continued with the "get an early lead" game plan in set three. A kill by Ivanoff, and an ace by sophomore Kirstian Haugen helped Unalakleet jump ahead 7-1. When Moses came to the line, her team was down 5-9. She once more decided to let serving help get her team back in the game. Unalakleet again had trouble establishing an offense off her powerful serves. The Lynx used a well placed tip by freshman Oswald Moses, and two kills by Henry to take a 10-9 lead.

The third set score stayed close until late in the game. With the teams tied at 17, Erickson sent two precisely placed tips and chipped in a timely block to help the Wolfpack take a 20-17 lead. Unalakleet abandoned their power game for the remainder of the set, which seemed to work. A well tipped ball by Wesley Ivanoff at set point finalized a 25-19 triumph in set three.

Just like the aforementioned pugilists, Golovin and Unalakleet traded blows in set four. Other than a solid kill shot by Olson, and two firm hits from Gage Ivanoff, both teams settled for long volleys and waited for the other to make mistakes. With the score tied 21-21, Ivanoff seized the moment by giving three thunderous spikes. The Lynx worked hard to counter those attacks, including some fine back row hitting by senior Alice Amaktoolik, but the Wolfpack drove the score to 25-22. The three sets to one match victory gave Unalakleet a number one seed at the upcoming state tournament.

After the match, Gage Ivanoff, the Wolfpack's modest leader, credited the victory to the team's deep bench. He knows there will be tough competition at the tournament next weekend, "but if we play our game," said Ivanoff, "I think we can take it."

Unalakleet has won the state tournament each of the past two years. Coach Nick Hanson, a former Wolfpack player, guided the squad to a title in his first year as head coach in 2013. He was the assistant coach for the team's victory in 2012. Unalakleet will be pushing its current streak of tournament appearances to 11. No team in the history of Mixed-6 play has made as many consecutive trips south.

Golovin will be making its record extending 12th overall state appearance. The Alaska School Activities Association established a co-ed, or Mixed-6, volleyball contest in 1997. Appropriately, the Lynx won that first meet. They added state titles in 1999, and 2004, and have been runners up three times, including last year when they lost to the Wolfpack.

Mixed-6 volleyball and Golovin have become synonymous. The game is part of the school and the community culture. Long time coach, and former Lynx player, Frank Amaktoolik said, "we're lucky because our younger kids see volleyball all the time, so they know what to do. The kids play every other night at open gym, and a lot of alumni play them." Golovin's success defies logic to some degree. They have a high school student population of about 13 kids. Nearly every one plays and travels with the team.

The Shishmaref Northern Lights demonstrated that the powerhouses better not become too complacent, as they took part in a spirited match for third and fourth place. During the tournament Shishmaref had its power supplied by senior Cory Ningeulook, who received fine passes from setter Denise Fernandez. They worked hard to secure a spot in the consolation match by beating the tournament host Shaktoolik Wolverines, the Koyuk Malamutes, the Saint Michaels Storm, and the White Mountain Wolves. The Northern Lights were beaten in a first round match by Golovin.

Shishmaref's opponent in the last match of the tournament was the Teller Aklaqs, who had advanced by beating the Storm, and the Gambell Qughsatkut. They too lost an earlier match to Golovin. The set and spike game of seniors Kaitlin Topkok and Cameron Okbaok, along with the hustle of junior Ryan Topkok, proved too much for Shishmaref, as Teller defeated the Northern Lights three sets to one. The win gave Teller a third place finish, and dropped the Northern Lights to fourth.

Top female and male spiker awards, as voted by the coaches, went to Helen Bruns of Brevig Mission, and Okbaok. The tournament's top servers were Wesley Ivanoff, and Golovin's Keisha Olanna. Fernandez received the top setter award, and Okbaok was voted top defender.

The All Tournament Team included White Mountain's Anna Prentice, Saint Michael's Deidre Levi, Amaktoolik, Bruns, Shishmaref's Hillary Sinnok, Gage Ivanoff, Topkok, Olson, White Mountain's Joshua Prentice, and Ningeulook.

Gambell earned the Academic Award with a grade point average of 3.89. The Team Sportsmanship Trophy went to Saint Michaels

Mixed-6 volleyball is played with no more than three boys on the court at any time. The serving order alternates between the two genders. At least one girl must make contact with the ball each time a team uses more than one hit to advance the ball across the net. The net is set at the men's volleyball height of 7 feet 11 5/8 inches. The women's volleyball height is 7 feet 4 1/8 inches. Schools must have populations of between five and 60 students.

The Western Conference is the only conference in Alaska that qualifies two members for the state tournament. The opening rounds of the state meet have a pre-determined pool play format. Unalakleet, as the conference's number one seed, will play the top seeds from the Northwest and Southeast Conference's. Golovin, as the Western Conference's number two seed, will play the top seeds from the Yukon River and North Slope Conferences.

CHAMPIONSHIP GAME— The Golovin Lynx played the Unalakleet Wolfpack in the championship game. The Unalakleet Wolfpack won the game 25-21, 14-25, 25-19, 25-22.

Savoonga post office seeking new post workers

By Diana Haecker

In mid-November the only U.S. postal worker in Savoonga resigned and left U.S. Postal Service management scrambling to find a replacement to keep the mail flowing to the community's residents.

According to U.S. Postal Service Alaska District marketing manager Dawn Peppinger, the Savoonga postmaster resigned unexpectedly for personal reasons. "Normally, they give us two weeks when they resign," Peppinger said. This didn't happen in this case and so the doors of the post office remained shut until the postal service could find a temporary replacement. At first, the acting postmaster from Barrow was recruited to fill the void and process mail. Then, a postal worker from Teller was dispatched to Savoonga to keep the post office staffed. "We'll piecemeal it together until we find a permanent replacement," said Peppinger.

In the meantime, USPS is recruiting for one or more postal workers, preferably from the island community. Peppinger said they have received three applications. The applicants must pass background checks and mandatory drug testing. Successful applicants then undergo a week of training, done onsite by an experienced postmaster from else-

Northland becomes 'Alaska Marine Lines' in Western Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska, Dec. 4, 2014 /PRNewswire/ - Alaska Marine Lines, Inc. changed the name of its Western Alaska service from Northland Services to Alaska Marine Lines this month. The name change results from the integration of Northland Services into Alaska Marine Lines, one of the Lynden family of companies.

"Customers will continue to enjoy the same great service and people, but now under the Alaska Marine Lines name," says Alaska Marine Lines Vice President Bill Northey. "The team is the same, we're just changing our jerseys. As part of the Lynden family of companies, we have greater options to better serve customers' shipping needs.

According to a court affidavit, NPD Sgt. Stotts and Officer Sean

Octuck responded to a West Second Avenue residence on a report Denise Langton had called NPD to report that Walters was pointing a gun at her husband, George Langton.

The officers made contact with Walters who was standing beside the arctic entrance holding a shotgun. While Stotts was holding Walters at gunpoint, he observed George Langton leaving down an alleyway.

The complaint cited information from Denise Langton that Walters had hit her in the head with an unknown object causing pain and swelling to the back of her head, according to court documents. Denise and George Langton had gone to the residence with a bottle of red cap Monarch vodka, Denise told officers. Walters then demanded that the Langtons leave the home and leave the bottle in the residence.

Denise Langton fled the scene and called NPD, according to the court filing. Subsequent reports to police

West Tank farm land to be transferred to city

By Diana Haecker

The U.S. House of Representatives last week passed the National Defense Authorization Act with provisions of interest to Nome and the interest. In the big picture, the bicameral legislation will authorize $521.3 billion in national defense spending and $63.7 billion for overseas operations. Of Nome interest is language that would convey seven acres of land, that are know as the West Nome Tank Farm, from the U.S. Air Force to the City of Nome.

"The Secretary of the Air Force may convey, without consideration, to the City of Nome, Alaska (in this section referred to as the "City") all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property consisting of approximately seven acres, including improvements thereon, known as the ÛSAF West Nome Tank Farm, and located adjacent to the City's port facilities along Port Road in Nome, Alaska, for the purpose of permitting the City to use the property for municipal purposes, including municipal office space, port development, fuel storage for the municipal power plant, and municipal public utility facilities," reads the bill.

The city had tried for several years to acquire the West Nome Tank Farm property to accommodate future port growth. With the inclusion in the defense bill, the transfer will be accomplished.

The property was the site of a tank farm and fuel depot to support mili-

Arctic defense review

Another relevant section of the defense bill is the inclusion of a general review of the Department of Defense's Arctic Capabilities. In its 2012 report on Arctic capabilities, the Government Accountability Office noted that the Department of Defense has undertaken some efforts to assess the capabilities needed to meet national security objectives in the Arctic, but it is unclear whether the Department will be in a position to provide needed capabilities in a timely and efficient manner.

The Department published an Arctic Strategy in November 2013. In that strategy, the Department identified a number of investments that will need to be made. The Comptroller General of the United States is directed to provide to the congressional defense committees a review that will address several things. One is a review of the process used by the Department of Defense to identify and continued on page 14

1:47 p.m. Nome Police Department received a report of a stolen vehicle from the west side of town. During the course of the investigation the vehicle was found outside the City by NPD and recovered by the Alaska State Troopers. Nick (Gil) Epperson was taken into custody for Vehicle Theft in the 1st Degree and Resisting Arrest

Nick was held at Anvil Mountain Correctional Facility without bail. 7:37 p.m. Nome Police Department Officers conducted a traffic stop on a four-wheeler with three juvenile occupants who were not wearing helmets. The four-wheeler was found to be a stolen vehicle linked to several stolen vehicles taken over the last week. Investigation indicates taken over the last week. Investigation indicates the juveniles are members of a group of juvenile vehicle thieves that have been stealing motorized vehicles from several Nome residents for a period of several months. A list of motorized vehicles was compiled and all but one of the vehicles positively identified was located and seized for safekeeping. Nearly all of the vehicles that were stolen were easily accessed due to the owners leaving their keys in the ignition while left unattended. Other juveniles have been implicated and investigation is continuing. In consultation with Juvenile Probation Office, one immediate ar rest was made and several additional charges for Felony and Misdemeanor offense arrests are being forwarded to the Juvenile Probation Office for the juveniles currently involved in the investigation. The juveniles reportedly stole the vehi cles because they were bored and they wanted to drive the machines they could easily steal.

The Nome Police Department would kindly advise Nome citizens that it is good practice to remove the keys from the ignition of any vehicle; secure them in a safe place; lock doors to cars and trucks; and remove items of value from vehicles to prevent theft.

NJUS faces payday-to-payday financing

NJUS board members have spent hours meeting in the Council Chambers, dogging the budget numbers, trying to regain control before the numbers controlled them.

The panel got a startling wakeup call this fall when Wells Fargo loan department cut off the cash flow the utility needed to pay for grant money-fueled projects pending reimbursement from federal and state

When the bank refused another line of credit without collateral, utility had to turn to City of Nome for a $2.2 million line of credit. The City wants its money back, and has exacted conditions from NJUS. In response, NJUS board members have been combing over the FY2015 budget and looking at operating cost cuts and justifying expenditures to provide the City a sound financial plan. John Handeland, to get pending labor contracts approved by Nome Common Council, has drawn up a sheet that shows the total cost of each employee at the utility. The Council was to meet in special session Dec. 16 to vote on approving the City and NJUS negotiated threevear contracts.

After several meetings that included two-hour closed executive sessions, Handeland and the NJUS board of directors have come up with cuts that include one or two staff positions and eliminated some services. Following an executive session called Dec. 10 to ostensibly to discuss labor contracts; Handeland said the utility still needed to pare the budget by $1 million.

At one point, Berda Willson, board chair, popped the question: After the City's cash flow was paid back with grant reimbursements and the budget had been pared down, where would the utility be in terms of cash flow?

Handeland's answer was short but not so sweet.

"Zero," he said, meaning that NJUS would be operating on monthto-month revenues, much like some ratepayers living paycheck-to-pay-

The good news is that although Handeland knows there needs to be a

Nome school board appoints interim superintendent

By Kristine McRae

The Nome school board met in a special meeting Monday evening to discuss interim superintendent applications and, after nearly an hour in executive session, appointed Sean Arnold to temporarily replace outgoing superintendent Steve Gast. Arnold was selected from a small applicant pool that included Nome-

Beltz principal Harlan Heinrich and assistant principal Doug Bushey.

Arnold is the director of Human Resources and Special Programs at the district and will assume the superintendent duties in addition to those of his current position.

Arnold first came to Alaska in the early 1990s with the Air Force, then moved into teaching and administration with districts in rural Alaska and, most recently, the Mat-Su borough. He is working on his doctorate in Educational Leadership and, prior to moving into administration, Arnold taught Social Studies, English, and Special Education. Here in Nome he is offering a professional development course to Nome teachers called "The Art and Science of Teaching," based on the Marzano model the district uses for instructional strategies.

Arnold said he would like to see an expansion of career and vocation education, as well as more cultural events and family involvement. "We have some amazing staff and programs that are already going on," he said, "and I feel we can do even more for our kids.'

When asked whether he would apply for the job permanently, Arnold said, "These are big shoes to fill, so we'll see how it goes, and if things go well I would consider putting in my application.'

He and his wife Jodi, who teaches reading and math at the Anvil City Science Academy, have been in Nome since July.

"I want to thank the Nome school board for having the confidence that will allow me to accomplish this," Arnold said, "and I'm really looking forward to helping out. Nome is our

Alleged drug dealers plead not guilty

By Diana Haecker

On Monday afternoon, two people arrested for allegedly possessing heroin with the intent of dealing pleaded not guilty to charges filed in court on Dec. 5.

Yvonne Adkison, 22, and Kevin G. Beamish, also 22, were arrested two weeks ago on heroin-related charges. In Monday's arraignments in Judge Timothy Dooley's courtroom, both were represented by outof-town attorneys

Adkison's attorney Dan O'Phelan appeared telephonically and asked the hearing to be continued since he only recently accepted the case and had no chance to familiarize himself with the particulars. During the first felony appearance hearing on Dec. 5, Adkison indicated she has not enough funds available to hire an attorney and was assigned a public defender. The public defender agency withdrew from the case on Dec. 12 when private practice attorney Dan O'Phelan began to represent Adki-

David Stringer, representative from Cascadia Project Management who will oversee setup of the tower for ATT Alascom, if approved, told the panel that the existing equipment at 105 Front Street by the satellite dish east of the post office can't take the additional load for ATT's planned 4G LTE service.

Additionally, the new tower would support two more outfits, including Verizon, which has plans for Nome, and one other company.

Four-G, meaning fourth generation protocol, would bring faster mobile internet service than 3G, or third generation, whereby files would download several times faster on "smart" phones.

Chuck Wheeler, speaking during public hearing, liked the idea of more speed.

It [4 G LTE] will be better service than the competitor, therefore I recommend approving it," he said. It is FAA-approved; the location is ideal to serve the whole basin, and the lo-

Utility use within a commercia district requires a conditional use permit, Eileen Bechtol, city planner, told the panel, and a structure must comply with all local, state and federal laws. That includes requirements for building in a flood plain.

The tower was designed to existing agency requirements, Springer said.

Commissioner Sara Lizak expressed concern about residences near by-two housing units in the Wells Fargo building, a residence on the corner of Steadman and Front streets and apartments in the Cavota Building.

Scott Johnson and his family occupy a unit over Wells Fargo. He was concerned about tower specs that had it self supporting in 130 mph winds with no icing and 80 mph winds with ¼ inch of ice. What would be the stability in a storm with 80 mph winds and one-half inch of ice, Johnson wondered aloud. He wasn't against the project, but wanted more information.

Letters –

I hope that all of you are having a good, safe winter season. Remember, its cold out there, and our bodies were not made to touch it out, so dress warmly. You can always take things off, but sometimes you can't put things on, cause you left them at home. Don't forget to tell people where you're headed, if thy have to send help, don't let them have to guess as to which way you went.

I wish to high Heaven that people everywhere would learn about stinkweed-after all, it seems to grow in so many places. You can pick it year round, and all you have to do is boil water, and let it seep for a while. Or, you could boil it in water to taste. All you need is about 1/4 cup of it at a time, two to four times a day. If there isn't stinkweed around, and your not allergic to aspirin, you can have willow tea. As the other bark is pretty potent, you can peel it off, and let the inner bark steep in hot water for a while, then drink like a tea. At least the stinkweed doesn't taste as bad as cough syrup, and its good for your body and over 168 ailments including colds.

It saddens me that it seems the cops and courts go after people who should be left alone, and let go the people they should go after. Why is that? Is it because those people can't afford help or what? I was going to send pictures with this letter to show what a Village Public Safety Officer did to my daughter; but they somehow got deleted from my phone, and when I asked the state trooper for a copy of them he said I'd have to get a hold of his commanding officer who was pretty busy at the moment. It's amazing what they let them get away with—hiding behind the badge. Its no wonder people don't go to the authorities on some of the things that happened, they don't seem to be doing anything about it. Isn't it a shame that it happens so often.

Just like—I have a daughter that, even though we live in the same town, she can't come over, much less go anywhere unless her boyfriend goes with her. My daughter is beautiful, and has a beautiful heart, yet she has to put up withwhat you doing? Who you with? Are you messing around? Is it because he is messing around behind her back—that's usually why they accuse you? If you want to go with someone, and have a good, long lasting friendship, you're supposed to trust that person. You are supposed to ask how their day went, if there is something you could do for them. Maybe run them a bath or give a five-minute back rub. Or, maybe even cook for them. It doesn't take that long. Not try to control their lives, or run them down. Every person counts in this world, and we are supposed to treat each other as equals, not judge each other. Not make them a prisoner, or mistreat them, just because you yourself are insecure. It is not right for those you supposedly love. No one deserves to live that way.

Remember to give the people that look like they need a hug, a hug. Not only will it make them feel better, it would probably make you feel better. And say, "I love you," even if you don't know them, because it might make a world of difference to the other person. Or, at least say, "I'm glad I got to meet you." Never know—you just might be saving a person's life.

May God bless you and keep you safe in these years to follow. Remember he is a gracious God, and will bless you if you trust him and read his word. Prayer does wonders, some days I might pray 20 times that day. Don't forget to look at the sunrise and sunsets-there awesome. We are so blessed. Even with the medicinal and edible greens at our disposal-for free at that. I'm hoping to get a botany class here in Unalakleet next summer, so people can learn about the greens. Hopefully I'm almost there.

Just like, I have been looking for donations of Eskimo Drums, so we can start dancing here. I think it would do this community some good, because it would give people something to do. Could you help me? I'd appreciate it.

Saturday Markets have been going well. I'm glad people have finally started coming over with their wares. Keep it up—yay.

I'm also glad people have been attending more of the public meetings. I'm just disappointed that they don't give all the people time to talk before they move on. In my parents' time they stayed until midnight and went back the next day if they had to until everyone had their say.

For my friends—give each other hugs for me, and say I said, "Hi bud." Take care you all.

As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Kawerak hires Marine Ad-

Kawerak Inc. has created a new position, that of a Marine Advocate to ready the region for the impacts of increased marine traffic through the region and Bering Strait. Austin Ahmasuk was hired to head Kawerak's Marine Program, with Freida Moon-Kimoktoak helping in her capacity as the marine program specialist. "They will form a basis of advocacy via local involvement, outreach to tribes and engagement at ocean policy forums," said a press release from Kawerak.

Search still ongoing for missing Korean fishermen

Coast Guard search and rescue crews were relieved by Republic of Korea assets on Saturday in their search for 26 crewmembers from the fishing vessel 501 Oryong that capsized Nov. 30, near Chukotka, Russia, in the Bering Sea. The Coast Guard completed more than 24 searches covering 4,576 square miles utilizing two cutters, two helicopters and multiple airplanes. Coast Guard crews will continue to partner with the Republic of Korea to provide search and rescue planning support.

"The sympathies of the Coast Guard go out to those impacted by this tragic maritime loss," said Rear Adm. Dan Abel, commander, Coast Guard 17th District.

Two Republic of Korea Navy P-3 Orion aircraft joined the search for survivors on Dec. 6, 2014. The Republic of Korea vessel Sam-Bong arrived at the 501 Oryong's last known position Saturday and began their investigation.

The Coast Guard offered to assist the Kamchatka Border Guard Directorate and the Republic of Korea with their search for survivors and deployed the Coast Guard Cutter Munro, a 378-foot high endurance cutter home-ported in Kodiak, with an embarked Coast Guard Air Station Kodiak MH-65 Dolphin helicopter. They also deployed the Coast Guard Cutter Alex Haley, a 282-foot medium endurance cutter homeported in Kodiak, with an Air Station Kodiak MH-65 Dolphin helicopter. Several Coast Guard Hercules C-130 aircraft from Air Station Kodiak also responded and two SAR planners from Juneau deployed to Anchorage to work alongside South Korean Navy P-3 aircrews.

The Republic of Korea reported the 501 Oryong, with 60 crewmembers, was hauling in its catch when a wave hit and flooded the vessel's storage chambers with seawater.

Good Samaritans rescued eight crewmembers, but one died of complications, 26 bodies were recovered and 26 crewmembers remain miss-

National Defense bill passes Senate

The U.S. Senate on Monday passed the National Defense Authorization Act that funds America's military for the upcoming year and contains a wide array of key Alaskan priorities. The NDAA passed the Senate 89-11 and will head to the President's desk for a signature. The bill contains language that transfers seven acres of land in Nome near the Port from the U.S. Air Force to the City of Nome in order to expand possible economic development opportunities. It also contains $40 million for improvements and expansions to the missile defense system at Fort Greely. The bill also authorizes funding to begin design of a missile defense radar that will be built in Alaska with a construction timeframe of roughly five years. It also confirms Eielson Air Force Base as the preferred location for two squadrons of F-35s and delivers full funding to keep the goal of 2019 aircraft basing on track.

Fisheries degrees become more accessible to rural Alaskans

With a just a phone line and Internet access, a student anywhere in Alaska can now earn a Bachelor of Arts degree in fisheries at the University of Alaska Fairbanks School of Fisheries and Ocean Sciences.

The school offers the only Bachelor of Arts degree in fisheries in North America and this year adopted two new concentrations within the degree program that will provide students a more focused undergraduate experience. Incoming students will now select a concentration in either rural and community development or business and social sciences.

The rural and community development track is being offered through a partnership with UAF College of Rural and Community Development and is designed to provide a full degree program to rural Alaska residents. Courses are delivered through a combination of audio conference, videoconference and elearning avenues. Students also can attend classes at UAF rural cam-

"I feel really fortunate that we have this option out here," said fisheries student Jennifer Peeks, who lives in Bethel and has opted for the rural and community development concentration. "I like that it provides a focus on rural involvement and things that affect rural communities. it was a good fit for my goals of working with subsistence issues and communities here."

The program will provide a broad background of knowledge for students interested in fisheries business, administration, and leadership in rural and indigenous communities in Alaska and the circumpolar North. This degree program will focus on increasing cultural awareness. strengthening leadership capacity and fostering community development, with an emphasis on the sustainable management of fisheries.

The goal is to train students to be community leaders while they are in their communities," said Trent Sutton, fisheries professor and associate dean at the school. "There will be a lot of fish classes and a lot of rural development classes."

The fisheries business and social science concentration is designed for students interested in opportunities in seafood or fisheries business fields, or a social sciences facet such as anthropology or political science.

All incoming student will need to decide which concentration to pursue by the end of the second year. Students can gain further subject matter depth through their choice of minor. The UAF fisheries BA degree was first created in 2009 and currently has 18 students.

rate increase for electric service, at this point he expects it to be in the range of 2 cents per kwh.

"I can live with 2 cents, not any more than that," Fred Moody, board member, declared.

In the short term, grants are not cost free. Usually Nome Joint Utility Systems has to pay for the work up front and then file paperwork for reimbursement. Some grants combine with low-cost loans, bringing debt service costs with them.

John Handeland, utility manager, has been successful in winning money from the state Dept. of Conservation, the federal Dept. of Agriculture, the Denali Commission and other energy, equipment and water and sewer infrastructure assists. The funding of grant proposals has opened Nome's east end streets for water and sewer extensions and service updates. Grant money allowed NJUS to top its wind farm at Banner Creek with two 900 kw capacity wind turbines. At the same time, fuel costs and labor have risen while electric rates have rested at the 1995 level, thinning out cash flow even more without an increase in rates except for a higher fuel surcharge.

Board members generally agreed that the utility needs to hold off on new projects and start building back cash reserves.

For several years, NJUS has stayed ahead of the game by shifting money from column to column and back, like dipping into operating money to cover other expenses. The utility had to ask Wells Fargo for extensions on payments due on the credit line at the bank. That necessity, and familiarity with NJUS financial records caused Wells Fargo to deny another credit line without NJUS putting up collateral.

An audit by an outside firm earlier this year did not find money misappropriated, but did note that NJUS was tardy in billing grant agencies for reimbursement.

Handeland attributed the delay to staff shortages at NJUS and revised reporting requirements at some agencies.

Getting down to brass tacks, there will be staff cuts. Handeland hopes these will be covered by early retirement, attrition and using apprentices for some work. The power plant foreman is set to retire next fall. Additionally, Handeland could see room to cut hours of summer administrative assistants. He could replace the foreman from within and contract out the foreman's environmental reporting duties to a less expensive employee, he said, to reduce the cost of the position.

Hauled water service which has few customers and does not pay for itself, will stop. A water truck that is absorbing expense in a heated storage building will be kicked out of the building to the old powerhouse and the building shut down or used to keep another service truck at ready. freeing $11,000 for water and sewer program expenses. Water customers would be able to fill water storage at the power plant and pay per gallon. Cutting the service will require a revision in the utility's tariff, Handeland informed the board. Handeland would follow up on converting the potable water program to a self-haul basis, he said.

Board members want to cut $63,000 paid for lobbying services. Because of cuts in federal and state budgets, grants are available to need lobbyists, Board member Carl Emmons observed.

"We don't have any projects, we aren't getting any money, is paying lobbyists a good investment?" he asked. "If we need to get to a barebones budget, do we need to give lobbying over to the City?"

Handeland explained that at the beginning of FY 14, the City had taken over paying for the state lobbyist while the utility paid for the federal lobbying service.

"We get a smaller bill and get benefits from both," Handeland said.

He thought keeping the lobbyists was a good idea. They had paid off in the past with project money from legislatures and currently, Larry Markley had assisted NJUS in getting the federal legislature in passing a bill that will allow the City to take ownership of the U.S. Air Force West Nome Tank Farm, more than six acres needed for port expansion at no charge.

Board member Fred Moody agreed, noting that lobbyists follow legislative business every day. "They know the people to talk to," Moody said.

Board member Dave Barron observed that maybe the utility would be better off without needing cash to finance grant work.

"Maybe if we don't get grant programs, we would have money in our pockets," he said. "We can't just have all these grants [and loans]. We will have to make sure we have money to cover the interest we will be paying."

The utility is figuring ways to ride herd on delinquent accounts payable, Handeland said, using a local collection service.

Board members observed that over 10 years at the current payment of $63,000 per year to the federal lobbyist, that money—$630,000—might in itself pay for a project.

Board member Pat Knodel questioned the expense of putting fluoride in the drinking water. The utility board voted fluoride out of the water, but the Council and the public voted it back into the municipal water supply. NJUS should stop putting the "poison" in the water and let the City take care of it, Moody said.

A City ordinance required fluoride in water, Handeland reminded. However, he suggested that NJUS suspend putting in fluoride over the weekend, which would reduce fluoride but it would start returning to desired levels Monday afternoon, for a savings in staff's weekend rounds and overtime pay. The overall savings would be around $30,000.

Handeland has been negotiating with grant agencies USDA and DEC to extend terms on loans from 20-year payback to 30-year payback which would raise the interest from the current 1.5 percent, but result in reducing annual payments to the tune of $250,000.

Handeland is also working with Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. to check the feasibility of joining their fuel-purchase group. NJUS has already committed to buying with Western Alaska Fuel Group. Should NJUS pull out, costs for other member villages would shoot up, Handeland said. He hopes that NJUS could continue with its supplier through WAFG and get assistance and favorable financing through NSEDC.

Handeland hopes to step up production of wind-generated energy to replace more diesel-generated electric power to cut fuel costs. Some wind power could go to heat utility buildings so that diesel generators could cling to operating levels for maximum efficiency, he said.

The board and NJUS staff are working to have a financial plan to present to the Nome Common Council next Monday, per requirements set for receiving the $2.2 million line of credit from the City. Additionally requirements include allowing full access of NJUS books and accounts to Julie Liew, City of Nome finance officer and having reimbursements from grant agencies go directly to the City. Liew has been sitting in on finance talks with the board and asking budget questions and providing prompts for discussion.

nuisance complaint for which he had not received satisfaction, he said: Ravens nesting in the tower, in the nest whose summer occupants are annual camera pleasers. They swoop down and attack people, swoop down in his backyard, and make a nuisance. The tower was going to be an eyesore, Johnson granted, "but let's be realistic— Nome needs modern communication," he said.

"We really have to look at safety of the tower," she said. "We have storms that throw up ice floes and break wall on Front Street."

The Commission generally favored lighting on the tower for small aircraft that fly up and down the beach, even the Iditarod Air Force, a group of pilots who support the annual March Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race and the ending on Front Street in Nome.

Lighting would be no problem, according to Springer, who said lights had been left off the tower to satisfy what designers believed was public sentiment concerning lights.

Voluntarily placing lights on the tower would serve everyone's best interest, Commissioner Rob Cahoon opined. FAA review has approved the tower height with no precautionary measures needed, including lighting, according to Springer.

The Commission, vigilant of safety issues, tabled the tower issue and handed off a list of questions for Stringer to take to ATT so he could return with clarifications at the next regular planning meeting in January. A month's delay would not kill the project, Springer said, as construction would not happen until the upcoming spring or summer.

nibus hearing for January 30, at 9 a.m. Bail remained at $30,000.

Kevin G. Beamish also appeared for his arraignment on Monday afternoon, telephonically represented by attorney John Cashion. Beamish also was assigned a public defender during his first court appearance on Dec. 5. The public defender withdrew from the case when Cashion entered his appearance on Dec. 12. Cashion entered a not guilty plea on behalf of Beamish.

Judge Dooley also scheduled an omnibus hearing for Beamish on January 30 at 9 a.m. His bail remained at $20,000.

Would the tower erected at sea's edge, although built to agency specifications withstand strong coastal gusts during Nome's boulder and tree-trunk hurling storms?

What about storm surges during the fall? What about coastal salt waters and erosion? The base would be concrete and the tower secured with anchor bolts, Springer said. Then what about corrosive seawater on the base and on the tower itself? Commissioners wanted to know.

What about residences in the tower fall zone?

Are there alternative sites that would be cost effective?

Is there an alternative structure that would be nicer looking than a latticework tower? ATT had already purchased a lattice tower, which would be necessary to hold the equipment of collocating companies, Springer told the Commission.

At the next Nome Planning Commission meeting, the panel was slated to receive a draft ordinance that would deal with a project the Commission could undertake to "proactively remove some of vacant, abandoned or derelict structures in Nome," according to a memorandum the Commission received at the Dec. 9 meeting from Bechtol and Greg Smith, building inspector.

During the recent and ongoing investigations into heroin dealers in Nome, an unusual officer has been part of the team consisting of Western Alaska Alcohol and Narcotics troopers and Nome Police Department officers.

The K-9 officer "Icon" played her part in the investigations and proved her value to local and state law enforcers. Icon is a two-year old German shepherd dog, born in Holland and raised and trained in the Kasseburg Kennel in Huntsville, Alabama. The Kasseburg Kennel trains dogs for law enforcement and border patrol purposes. Before Icon even made it to the Kasseburg Kennels for training, the dog had to pass an extremely difficult selection test to determine her genetic drive. Only 10 percent of dogs pass and enter training. Icon passed and received pretraining.

Icon's handler is NPD officer Justin Timm, who was instrumental in pushing for a K-9 partner at NPD.

Officer Timm is a regular NPD patrol officer, has a degree in criminal justice from the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee and a special interest in narcotics and drug enforcement.

At the beginning of this year, NPD Chief of Police John Papasodora gave the green light to add a K-9 to the NPD police force. In March, Timm flew to Alabama for a sixweek training course to be trained as a dog handler and to meet his new partner Icon.

With obvious affection for the dog, Timm described their relation-'We are a team. She's my parthe said during a recent interview with The Nome Nugget.

Her role in the recent drug arrests was to perform "drug sniffs" on a vehicle of interest. And she delivered. She was trained as a young dog to find objects that were treated with a narcotic scent. The dog is associating a fun reward for finding the strongest sources of the odor. "She is a passive indicator," explains Timm. "Once she finds the smell, she sits down or lays down and has a pinpoint stare." The dog gets rewarded with playtime, not food. And that's actually her salary, too. "She gets paid in food and toys," said Timm.

Timm said Icon is trained to sniff out heroin, meth, ecstasy and cocaine on vehicles, inside residences and through many distractions. Timm said in training, they have masked the scents, hidden drugs in luggage, meth in vacuum-sealed bags, heroin in mint boxes and Icon found it all. "She rarely gets anything wrong," he

The dog is not a bite dog or trained to sniff bombs. Timm said the pair continues their daily training with obedience routines and sniffing exercises. Working together also entails that Timm had to be trained in canine health, diet, first aid and how to detect mental and physical distress in the dog. His job is to guide her and then get out of the way to let the dog do her job. But also, he's there to eliminate hazards and to pay attention to the dog's body language.

As a canine officer, Icon will soon be fitted with a bullet- and stab-proof vest from the organization "Vested in Timm said that Icon is in the vehicle with him at all times and that it's not unusual that K9s get shot at and stabbed. In order to protect her, she will soon get her vest for protection.

Timm said that when the public sees him and the dog, they are absolutely welcome to approach and ask him about the dog, when the moment seems appropriate. But he also asks to not just approach and touch her without asking. "Please respect her space," Timm said. "Have a conversation with me, ask permission to touch her, but don't grab her. But by all means, talk with me about her."

The bond between human and canine officer is obvious as officer Timm brought out Icon for a photo shoot at the Public Safety Building. Icons eyes are fixed on Timm, she stands at attention and then goofs off when it is OK to do so.

Timm said he has worked with AST and the WAANT team on recent arrests but said he cannot talk about ongoing investigations in Nome.

the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus in Nome, Jacklyn Ivanoff, originally from Unalakleet, and Theresa Olanna, originally from Shishmaref, have been able to earn associate nursing degrees without having to move away from the region. The pair is the second cohort to have completed their coursework.

According to Carol Gales, UAF Northwest Campus program development manager, the nursing program is administered by the University of Alaska Anchorage Nursing School in collaboration with Northwest Campus. Most of the students' expenses have been paid for by various agencies around Nome, primarily Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation.

Gales says Ivanoff and Olanna will have an opportunity to attend the Northwest Campus year end commencement, but the Pinning Ceremony allowed for the two new nurses to be recognized directly after their completion of the program. Each of the recent graduates chose to have their sons do the honors of placing the commemorative pin on

During her Pinning Ceremony speech Olanna said, "this is the end of a five-year journey with UAA and UAF, and the beginning of a dream come true.

Ivanoff recognized The Bering Strait Health Consortium for their contributions and support. The health consortium includes Norton Health Sound Corporation, Kawarak, Northwest Campus, NACTEC (or Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Center), Nome Job Center, Nome Eskimo Community, Bering Straits Foundation, and other local partners.

Gales explained that the consortium was instrumental in establishing the nursing program here in Nome. They have been key players in finding funding, creating instructional space, and locating top-notch

The consortium works closely with Norton Sound Health Corporation. One of its missions is to respond to anticipated regional needs in health care as identified by NSHC. The consortium works with NACTEC to help organize career trainings, such as CNA (certified nurses assistant) classes for regional students wishing to enter the health field. Both Ivanoff and Olanna completed CNA training through NACTEC and Northwest Campus.

Students of the outreach nursing program are guided by local NSRH Currently NSRH nurse Mindy McIntosh provides instruction as a UAA adjunct teacher. Students also attend videoconferences with UAA School of Nursing instructors. Students travel periodically to either Anchorage or Fairbanks for clinical classes, but get most of their clinical experience in

Up to four students are accepted in each two-year cycle. The acceptance process uses a ranking system where students receive points for achieving certain criteria. Points are awarded for things like completing all required non-nursing classes, experience in health care fields, and student scores on the PAX-RN test.

The Nome program started in January of 2011. In December of 2012 Jessica Mute, Amber Ryan, and Sarah Weaver attended their pinning ceremony. The program's first local nursing instructor was Bridgett Watkins. The three graduates of the first cohort are all currently employed by Norton Sound Health Corporation.

Weaver said she has a really good job at NSRH, and had been offered opportunities that she might not get in other places. "Nome's nursing program draws people from our region," she said. "Local students know the people, they know the culture, and they have a heart for the people who live here." She emphasizes that the program makes a big investment in families here too.

Before applying for the nursing program, students must complete roughly 33 credits of required coursework. All prerequisite classes can be taken from any village site in the region through the university's distance delivery program. Many of the courses are taught by Northwest Campus faculty. Northwest Campus advisors guide prospective students and help determine reasonable course loads

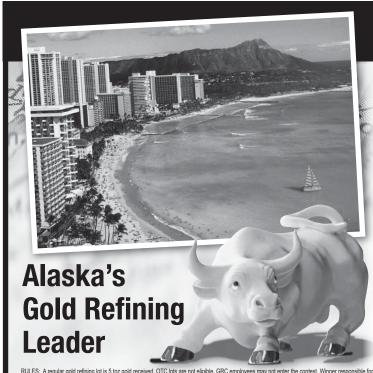

Those admitted into the program are expected to be full-time students. Nursing students must complete 37 nursing credits to receive their associate's degree.

Nome is one of 13 UAA outreach sites that offer nursing. The others include: Dillingham, Ketchikan, Sitka, Juneau, Kodiak, Homer, Kenai, Mat Su, Bethel, Kotzebue, Valdez, and Fairbanks.

UAA and Northwest Campus will welcome their third nursing cohort in January 2015. Three new students have been accepted into the program.

Nome LEPC TIER II Reporting

The Nome LEPC is presenting government agencies and private entities in the Bering Straits Region with information related to Tier II reporting requirements. This is in accordance with federal regulations in Title III of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, Section 312, Public Law 99499, codified at 42 U.S.C. Section 11022. The Act is also known as SARA Title III.

Annual Tier II reports are required by organizations that maintain a physical inventory of applicable hazardous chemicals in quantities that are equal to or exceed threshold limits. Some organizations are exempt from reporting requirements per SARA Title III or other federal regulations. All organizations are exempt for inventory below threshold limits.

Tier II reporting provides specific information to the public, local government (including the Fire Department), and state government, about hazardous chemicals present at your facility at any time during the year. Complete reporting includes submitting a copy of the Materials Safety Data Sheet (MSDS) for all chemicals that meet threshold limits.

Your organization may receive a letter in the next few weeks. Detailed information and instructions will be included in the packet. If you do not receive a letter, please contact the Nome LEPC by calling (907)443-8522 if you have any questions as to whether or not your organization may be required to submit annual inventory reports in accordance with the Act.

This notice is paid for by the Local Emergency Planning Committee Grant, State of Alaska.

Governor cuts funds earmarked for Road to Ambler

By Diana Haecker

Governor Bill Walker and Lieutenant Governor Byron Mallott on Monday released their budget proposal, leaving Parnell's operating work-in-progress budget intact without endorsement, but stripped the capital budget to a total of $106 million.

Capital projects surviving the red pen are those that have a federal or other matches. Governor Walker said in a press release that his team would spend the next few weeks reviewing all capital projects and operating budget before submitting its final revisions no later than February 18.

Alaska faces a budget shortfall for the current fiscal year because oil production dipped and oil prices are at a five-year low. The FY2015 budget was set last year at $6.1 billion. If the average oil price stays at $76 per barrel, the state would get $2.6 billion in revenue. That leaves a budget gap of $3.5 billion, according to the governor's office. Even after cutting from the operating and capital budgets, the state will face a similar gap for FY2016, which begins July 1, 2015 and ends June 31, 2016.

Funds that were struck from Parnell's capital budget list include the mega-hydro project Susitna-Watana with $20 million and $8 million for the Ambler Road project. Since FY 2011 the Ambler Road project has received $26.25 million in capital budget allocations for preliminary studies and development associated with the road project. The road would benefit NovaCopper Inc., a spin-off of the Canadian company NovaGold Resources Inc. that failed to operate the Rock Creek gold mine in Nome after the mill and production complex were built in the Snake

Local opinion from Bettles to Kotzebue had been torn between the economic promise a mine near Ambler could bring and conservative voices who feared the road and mine would destroy a delicate landscape and the subsistence life of the communities along the proposed road's corridor. Seven communities and stakeholder organizations have passed resolutions opposing the proposed road-from the City of Bettles to the Kobuk Traditional Council.

An AIDEA-led All Corridor Leadership Meeting was scheduled to take place in Fairbanks on Tuesday and Wednesday. Public testimony will be heard on Wednesday, December 17, between 1:45 p.m. and 3:45 p.m.

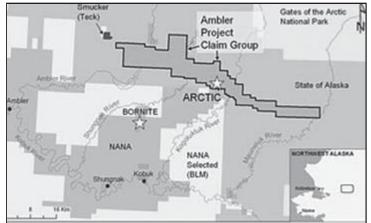

Also not on the governor's budget list were $22 million for the Alaska Housing Finance Corp.'s home weatherization program, $10 million for the AHFC energy rebate program and $45 million for the Knik Arm Bridge project.

In a press release issued on Monday, Governor Walker and Lieutenant Governor Mallott urged Alaskans to pull together to prioritize state spending, to identify inefficiencies and to cut waste in order to minimize dipping into Alaska's savings account.

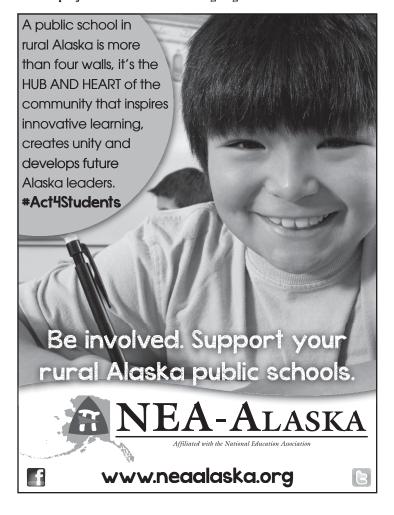

The administration said it wants the public to weigh in on the process.

"We invite all Alaskans to give us their thoughts," said Lieutenant Governor Mallott. "Together, we need to reinvent state government and rationalize our fiscal policy."

In the coming weeks, the administration announced that it will set up a system through which Alaskans can share their ideas.

PROPOSED ROAD— To reach the Ambler Mining project, a 240-mile long road corridor was proposed to be built. Under the current budget, the road project won't have the funding to go forward.

Total allowable catch of Bering Sea pollock increases for 2015

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council has approved a Total Allowable Catch of 1.31million metric tons of eastern Bering Sea pollock for 2015, an increase of 43,000 metric tons compared to the 2014 TAC. The council set 2015 TACs for all directed groundfish fisheries in the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands area at a meeting last week in Anchorage. The annual harvest of all species of groundfish in the BSAI is capped at 2 million metric tons.

Findings of two fish surveys conducted last summer by the National Marine Fisheries Service—a bottomtrawl survey and an acoustic-trawl survey—showed an upsurge of nearly 60 percent in the Bering Sea pollock biomass. The survey also found biomass increases in most of the other Bering Sea groundfish species targeted in directed fisheries.

The NMFS fish survey results were incorporated into an integrated stock assessment for the council's Groundfish Plan Team meeting in November. The team recommended an Overfishing Limit and an Allowable Biological Catch for each BSAI groundfish fishery for review by the council's Scientific and Statistical Committee and council members.

Groundfish Plan Team co-chair Dr. Mike Sigler told the council the eastern Bering Sea walleye pollock stock is in good condition and has recovered from low levels induced by warm conditions in the early 2000s. It's possible to set an ABC of almost 3 million metric tons of pollock, he added.

However, Sigler said the team agreed to set the 2015 pollock ABC at 1.63 million metric tons, well below the maximum permissible level, for the following reasons. (1) The 2008 year class of pollock will account for more than half of the 2015 spawning biomass. (2) In 2014 the fleet achieved good catch rates and low salmon bycatch with an ABC far below the maximum permissible level. (3) The current low pollock roe recovery rates may be indicative of reduced reproductive potential.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. receives a share of the annual Bering Sea pollock TAC quota that is allocated to the Western Alaska Community Development Program. The company has acquired additional pollock quota through investments.

Presiding judges and Court of Appeals judge appointed

Chief Justice Dana Fabe of the Alaska Supreme Court announces the appointment of four presiding judges: Superior Court Judge Trevor N. Stephens for the First Judicial District; Superior Court Judge Paul A. Roetman for the Second Judicial District; Superior Court Judge William F. Morse for the Third Judicial District; and Superior Court Judge Michael A. MacDonald for the Fourth Judicial District.

The chief justice of the Alaska Supreme Court appoints a presiding judge for each of the four judicial districts. The appointments are for a one year term and cover a calendar year period, and incumbents are eligible for reappointment.

In addition to regular judicial duties, the presiding judge of each judicial district has the administrative responsibility to supervise the assignment of cases and administrative actions of judges and court personnel, to keep current the business of courts, to review and recommend budgets, and to review the operation of the trial courts in the district to assure adherence to statewide court objectives and policies.

Judge Stephens was appointed to the superior court in Ketchikan in 2000. Prior to his appointment Judge Stephens worked in private practice, as an Assistant Public Defender, and as an Assistant District Attorney and District Attorney. He

Five Harlem Ambassadors had help from two Nomeites – Jon and Mikey Wongittillin – when they faced the Norton Sound All Stars in a game on Friday evening at the Rec

The premises were packed to the rafters with a wildly cheering crowd that patiently awaited the Harlem Ambassadors to arrive, since they missed their midday flight from Anchorage. When finally the game began around 9 p.m., the Norton Sound All Stars, consisting of Cameron Stiles, Thurston Stiles, Cody Sherman, Dwight Amaktoolik, George Lewis, Frank Amaktoolik Jr. and dunker Thomas Amaktoolik gave the Harlem Ambassadors a run for their money.

Both teams put on a great show and an action-filled game that kept the crowd at the edge of their seats.

In the end, the Harlem Ambassadors narrowly won. In the end, Harlem Ambassador team leader Lade Majic, with the Ambassadors for 19 years, gave an inspirational speech to the youth in the audience. "I've been doing this for 19 years now," she said. "Do you think I could do this if I was taking drugs?" No, yelled the crowd. "Drug-free, with a college degreee," shouted Lade Majic her message to the audience. She went on to speak that girls need to overcome their hesitations and follow their dreams. Then she addressed the boys and men in the crowd, saying that they need to grow up to become men, who protect and provide for their families, and don't stay boys in men's bodies.

The evening ended with a long autograph session, as all youth in the audience stood in line to get t-shirts,

Unalakleet 3rd, Golovin 6th at Mixed-6 state volleyball tournament

By Keith Conger

Usually, when a team loses a match at a state tournament they also lose the chance to be crowned victor. So the fact the Unalakleet Wolfpack beat the eventual co-ed champion Gustavus Foxes at the state meet in Anchorage this past weekend, but ended up behind them in the final standings, was unusual indeed.

The Alaska Student Activities Association's Mixed-6 State Volleyball Tournament uses the typical eight team, single elimination bracket format. The placement of teams in this arrangement is routinely determined prior to competition. The Mixed-6 contest, however, employed a "mini" round robin seeding scheme on Thursday to determine team placement in Friday and Saturday's bracket play. There are actually nine teams admitted to this unique co-ed tournament and each round robin "pool" consists of three teams. Of course mathematically, that means one team is eliminated from the tournament bracketing even before the real action begins.

Round robin play pitted Unalak-leet against the Noatak Lynx and Gustavus in Pool B. Unalakleet beat Gustavus 2 sets to 0 in its short pool play match, while splitting with Noatak 1-1. Those results were enough for the Western Conference's top representatives to advance as the number one seed from the pool. Noatak, by way of its split with Gustavus, advanced as the number two seed from Pool B.

Golovin had advanced out of Pool A as the number one seed. They split their match with the Nunamuit Wolves, and beat Scammon Bay 2 sets to 0.

Gustavus, however, still had volleyball life and was able to work its way back into the tournament by virtue of a special Pool D made up of the last place teams from the three other pools. Gustavus split with the Scammon Bay Eagles, and then beat the Port Alsworth Lynx 2 sets to 1.

Due to their favorable outcome in pool D, Gustavus earned a full five set match with the Golovin Lynx in the first round of bracket play on Friday morning. Gustavus, who tied for seventh last year after almost a decade's absence from the state volleyball scene, would have seemed to be the underdog playing a Golovin team that had won three state titles, and had made 12 state tournament appearances. Golovin, however, came out flat, losing the first set 25-6. They rebounded a bit in the second set, yet still lost 25-20. Golovin was able to take the third set 26-24, but could not hold off their opponent for long, as Gustavus won set four 25-17, for a 3 sets to 1 match victory.

Typically teams do not play each other twice at a state tournament, but the team from Gustavus would get a heavy dose of Western Alaska volleyball as their win against Golovin resulted in a Friday evening rematch with the heavily favored, two time defending state champions from Un-Gustavus stunned the more experienced team 25-19, and 25-22 in the first two sets of the match, before losing the third set 21-25. They came back to beat Unalakleet 25-12 to clinch and advance. Gustavus' four set semifinal triumph sent them to the championship match where they beat the Nikoloevsk Warriors 20-25, 25-21, 25-15, 24-26, 15-

Unalakleet had to contend with Nunamuit for third place on Saturday afternoon. They were able to come away with a victory with scores of 25-16, 28-26, 20-25, 25-16.

Golovin worked its way back up the consolation side of the bracket Saturday morning by beating the Akiachak Huskies 25-18, 25-18, 25-23. Later that afternoon the Lynx from Golovin bowed out to the Lynx from Noatak in the fourth place match 25-20, 31-29, 25-20. Golovin ended up in sixth place.

According to Bering Strait School District athletic director Jeff Erickson, a new tournament format was adopted last year to accommodate the increase in number of Mixed-6 schools statewide. Erickson believes that this is a healthy sign for the sport, and can even envision ASAA creating up to a 12, or even 16, team tournament in the future.

Erickson also stated that Unalakleet's Gage Ivanoff and Roberta Cooper, as well as Golovin's Peter Olson were named to the 2014 Mixed-6 State Volleyball All-tournament team.

MAKING HISTORY (top) — Nome-Beltz senior Emery Booshu prepares to take down one of his opponents at the ASAA State Wrestling Championships at Bartlett High School last weekend. Booshu won all of his matches, and claimed first place in the 145 pound weight class. He became only the second person in the history of 3A wrestling to win four state titles.

Nanooks place sixth at state tourney

By Keith Conger

A Nome-Beltz High School squad of six wrestlers placed third at the ASAA 1A/2A/3A Wrestling State Championships this past weekend at Bartlett High School. The Nanooks made the most of their numbers as they were the only team in the top eight to travel with fewer than 10 wrestlers.

The Kotzebue Huskies placed first with 16 wrestlers, while the defending state champion Bethel Warriors placed second carrying 23 athletes. Wrestlers from 60 different sites participated at the meet.

The Nanooks were lead by senior Emery Booshu who was crowned champion in the 145 pound classification. Booshu's win capped one of the most storied careers in the history of Alaska high school wrestling. Booshu becomes only the second 3A wrestler, and the 10th overall when including all divisions, to win a state title in each of his four years of eligibility. With the win he ran his season mark to 34-0.

Booshu sailed through the preliminary rounds on his way to the champion match. He recorded his first fall in 1 minute, 26 seconds against Samiula Finau of Glennallen High School. He followed that up with a 21-5 quarterfinal technical fall over Hunter Fitch of Craig High School, and then pinned Gavril Kalugin of Voznesenka High School in 4 minutes, 33 seconds.

Familiar foe Gary Eakin of Kotzebue High School awaited Booshu in the first place match. Eakin, a former state champ in his own right, entered the contest with a 28-3 record, with two of the three losses coming at the hands of Booshu.

A convincing 11-4 decision against Eakin concluded a perfect weekend for Booshu. Nome-Beltz coach Dudley Homelvig said he felt Booshu deserved to win the Outstanding Wrestler Award, but Booshu is so technically solid that his matches seldom have dramatic endings and he tends to be overlooked.

Nome's Leif Erikson, a junior, and defending state champion in the 126 pound weight class, placed second in the 138 pound division. He had the unfortunate task of wrestling a 4A competitor in the final match. A decision made by the Alaska School Activities Association board of directors allowed the larger 4A teams of the Southeast Conference to wrestle during the 1A/2A/3A season, and participate in the small schools state tourney during the 2014-2015 season.

Erikson won 33 matches in 2014 and suffered only two losses, both against Marcus Martin of 4A Ketchikan. Martin came away with a 6-3 decision in the final. Homelvig has seen all the players at the state level this year, including the much bigger 4A schools in Anchorage. He still considers Erikson the best 1A/2A/3A 138 pound wrestler in the state, and second best overall.

Homelvig recognized Nome's Oliver Hoogendorn as a huge success story. The senior finished his Nanook wrestling career with a second place finish in the 182 pound classification. Hoodendorn recorded a first round fall over Dillingham's Braden Timurphy in 2 minutes, 27 seconds. He had a close call in the quarterfinals match, where he narrowly beat Cordova's Cody Howard in a 7-6 decision.

Hoogendorn beat 4A Juneau-Douglas wrestler Cody Weldon in a 7-4 decision in his semifinal match. His final contest was a pin at the hands of defending 182 pound state champion Josh Roetman of Kotzebue, who finished his season 34-0. Hoogendorn's 2014 record was 18 wins versus 10 losses.

All six Nanook wrestlers scored points for the team. James Horner, competing in the 152 pound class, had a major decision over Colbin Hanson of Valdez High school 14-5. He was eliminated by Craig's Wyatt Patten in a 5-3 decision in the quarterfinal round. Horner then returned in the consolation rounds to pin Dillingham's Chasen Shade in 2 minutes, 37 seconds. A loss to Trey Henning of Unalaska High School in consolation round three brought his record on the year to 17-12.

Senior Joe Cross was also able to reach consolation round three by beating Dillingham's Darren Napoli 8-5, and Sand Point's Alex Gilbert 5-2. He concluded his year with a 9-4 record.

Nolan Horner made sure that all Nanook wrestlers reached at least consolation round three. He brought his season record to 16-13 with a consolation round two pin of New Stuyahok wrestler Anthony Alexie in 1 minute, 19 seconds. Nome's Jason Gilder, the team's seventh state qualifier, was unable to compete due to injury.

BSSD and Girls Results

The Bering Strait School District's highest finisher was Everson Paniptchuk of Shaktoolik High School. Paniptchuk earned a spot in the 113 pound semifinal match with a 6-5 decision over Kye Pearce of Monroe Catholic High School, and a 14-7 decision over Dillingham's Daniel Miller. He met up with Miller again in the 5th place match, winning a 8-0 major decision.

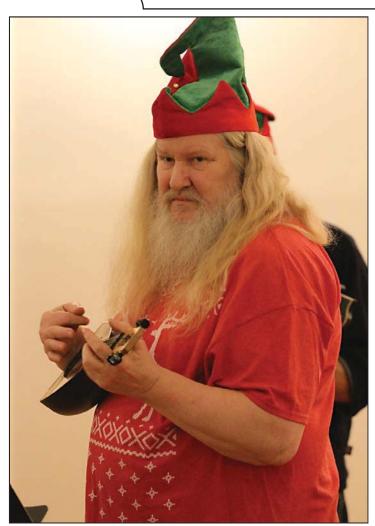

Unalakleet's Sikulik Johnson advanced to consolation round three of the 170 pound class. He won 10-3 in a round one decision over Hutchison High School's Matthew Fagen, and recorded a fall over Greg Zacker of

Newhalen High School in a time of 2 minutes, 46 seconds. He fell to eventual state champion Zach Haviland of Kotzebue. State qualifier Josh Fitka of Saint Michaels wrestled twice in the 106 pound classification twice in the 106 pound classification. The 2014 ASAA 1A/2A/3A Wrestling State Championships saw the first ever girls wrestling tournament. The Bering Strait School District had one one wrestler entered in the meet. Tanisha Slwooko of Gambell placed sixth in the 160 pound class. Kotzebue's Moira Sheldon won the 106 pound classification with an 8-2 decision over Wrangle's Asila Heller. Mount Edgecumbe's three state girls weight class titles were the most by any school. Nome-Beltz entered no girl wrestlers.

SENIOR CAPTAIN—Bering Air Senior Captain Larry Eggart flew the newly acquired King Air 200 from Wichita, Kansas to Nome. The plane is the latest addition to the Bering Air fleet.

NEW TO NOME— The King Air, center, is prepared for its first medivac flight on Thursday morning.

Bering Air acquires new Beechcraft King Air 200

By Diana Haecker

Last week, the region's medivac provider Bering Air added a third King Air plane to its fleet to expand its services to regular passenger and charter flights, but more importantly, to augment Bering Air's medivac fleet.

The local airline has been flying medivacs out of Nome for 35 years, said Bering Air Director of Operations David Olson. With the latest addition, the medivac-capable fleet now includes three King Airs, two 1900 Beechcraft planes and six Navajo aircraft Medically necessary evacuations are common occurrences in the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region. People in medical distress must be flown into Nome from the outlying 15 communities and on to Anchorage's medical facilities.

During last fiscal year, Bering Air flew 386 medivacs. Since the beginning of the new fiscal year on Oct. 1, there were already 86 medivacs, said Chief Pilot of Helicopters Russell Rowe.

Prior to arriving in Nome the new King Air was wired and outfitted with the appropriate equipment to support the needs of the Norton Sound Health Corporation medics, Rowe said.

It was also painted in the familiar, beige, brown, orange and white colors, which were chosen by Bering Air owners Jim and Chris Rowe in 1979 for their likeness to the fall colors of the region

Senior Captain Larry Eggart flew the twin-turbine pressur-ized airplane from Wichita, Kansas to Nome. Inside the plane Eggart pointed to the flight console, displaying a state-of-the-art computerized aviation package.

While parked in the hangar, mechanics prepared the new King Air for its first medivac flight from Nome to Anchorage on Thursday morning

Olson explained that it takes only 15 minutes tops to convert the plane from regular passenger service to a medivac capable aircraft as Bering Air employees readied the plane for its first medivac mission.

A few minutes later, medics rolled in a patient, boarded the plane and left into the pre-dawn morning skies over Nome for its maiden journey as part of the Bering Air fleet.

received both his undergraduate and law degree from Willamette University College of Law. He serves on the court system's Family Rules Committee, the Statewide Security and Emergency Preparedness Committee, the Court Improvement Project Committee, the Jury Management Committee and the Alaska Criminal Justice Commission. He is also a member of the Three Judge Sentencing Panel. He was born and raised in Ketchikan.

Judge Roetman was appointed to the superior court in 2010. He earned a Bachelor of Arts in Economics from the University of Alaska Anchorage in 1993 and he received his law degree from Regent University School of Law in 1999. He has lived in Alaska over 40 years and was raised in the coastal community of Valdez. Prior to law school he worked as a commercial fisherman, executive director of a regional economic development nonprofit, and as a Teamster. After law school, he worked for a civil law firm, the Alaska Legislature, and as a prosecutor for the State of Alaska. During his time on the bench he has served as Chair of the Post-Conviction DNA subcommittee responsible for drafting a new criminal rule to allow defendant's access to post conviction DNA analysis of evidence. He is also a member of the Criminal Rules Committee, and the Statewide Security and Emergency Preparedness Committee. He resides in Kotzebue.

Judge Morse was appointed to the superior court in Anchorage in 2002. He earned his undergraduate degree from the University of Virginia and his law degree from Lewis and Clark. He worked as an assistant public defender, assistant attorney general, and associate general counsel for the IBEW Local 1547. For seven years he presided over a therapeutic court, a collaborative program to monitor and assist probationers with alcohol and substance addictions. He presides over the Probationer Accountability with Certain Enforcement (PACE) court, a multi-agency program designed to provide a rapid response to probationers with alcohol or other substance abuse problems. He has been a member of the Appellate Rules Committee for fifteen years. He is the chair of the Governance Committee of the Lynx project, the court system's implementation of electronic filing and the transition to an electronic (paperless) record.

Judge MacDonald received his undergraduate degree from Harvard College in 1978 and his law degree from University of New Mexico in 1988. He was in private practice in Fairbanks from 1988 until his appointment to the Superior Court in 2007. Judge MacDonald is a member of the Family Law Rules Committee, Magistrates Training Committee, New Judge Training Committee, Jury Management Committee, and Electronic Courts Committee. The Fourth Judicial District, with a population of about 133,000, is administered from Fairbanks, and extends from the Canadian border on the east to the Bering Sea on the west, and includes Fairbanks, Tok, Delta Junction, Galena, Healy, Nenana and Fort Yukon in the east and Bethel, Chevak, Hooper Bay, Aniak, St. Mary's and Emmonak in the west.

Chief Justice Dana Fabe has announced the re-appointment of Judge David Mannheimer as Chief Judge of the Alaska Court of Appeals for a two year term, from January 1, 2015 through December 31,

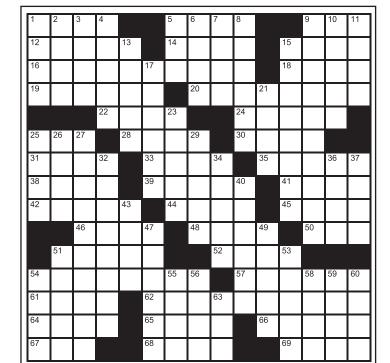

Judge Mannheimer has served on the Court of Appeals since November 1990. He has served as the chief judge of the court since January

Prior to his appointment to the of Appeals, Judge Court Mannheimer served as an assistant district attorney in Fairbanks from 1974-1976, as an assistant attorney general in Fairbanks from 1976-1978, and as an appellate attorney in the Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals (in Anchorage) from 1978-1990. He was the chief of that office from 1985 until his appointment to the bench.

The Alaska Court of Appeals is our state's intermediate appellate court, with the authority to hear appeals in criminal cases, juvenile delinquency cases, cases involving probation and parole decisions, and cases in which prisoners are challenging the legality of their confinement (post-conviction relief and habeas corpus petitions).

The Court of Appeals is headquartered in Anchorage. The chief judge serves a two-year term.

Obituary

Agnes Sarah Walsh

Agnes Sarah Walsh died December 9. She followed her dream for adventure and nursing by taking a nursing job at Providence Hospital in 1946, moving her from California to Alaska. In 1947 she married the love of her life Daniel K. Walsh of Nome, where they raised nine children and she worked as a public health nurse.

Agnes was member of the Pioneers of Alaska Igloo #1, Beta Sigma Phi, the Nome ladies coffee group and the Altar Society. She loved July 4th family gatherings at Big Lake and Horseshoe Lake and camping at Byers Lake. She was instrumental in securing the property for the Girl Scout Camp Dexter, north of Nome.

Agnes had a special appreciation for and pursued life-long learning. She did not waiver when she lost her vision to macular degeneration in 2003. She relied on caregivers for her eyes, and books on tape from the Talking Books Center.

She loved travel and went to many of the lower 48 states, Europe and the Canadian provinces.

She embraced life; looking forward and never back. She was preceded in death by her husband Dan, granddaughter Kiana Dyen, her brother Dr. Robert Morelli and nephew Bobby Morelli.

She is survived by her nine children and their spouses: Catherine (Fred) Dyen, Teresa(Gary) Cushnie, Robert (Patrice), Joan (Peter Treleaven), John (Dawn), Rosemary (Dennis Heigis), Sharon (Andrew Niemiec) Patrick (Dawn Patience), Monica. 13 grandchildren and 1 grand-dog "Ms. Mac", 10 greatgrandchildren, many nieces, nephews and cousins from Alaska, across the U.S. and Ireland.

The family wishes to express their sincere appreciation and gratitude for all the kindness that friends, family and caregivers provided during her illness.

Memorial service is to be held on January 31, 2015 at 12 noon at Our Lady of Guadalupe Parish, Anchorage with a celebration of life to fol-

Opinion:

Mark Begich inspires young Alaskan to believe in politicians again

By Susan B. Andrews and John Creed

KOTZEBUE—Democrat Mark Begich sure delivered a compelling farewell speech in the US Senate on Dec. 11 following his Nov. 4 defeat for a second term.

Alaskans should check out Begich's speech on Youtube https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=M930guiCIoc to appreciate our collective loss after big money swept into Alaska and unseated one fine public servant.

Last summer our oldest son Myles returned home to Alaska after a year of teaching in Europe. He took a temporary job with the Begich campaign in his beloved hometown of Kotzebue. We love our son for so many reasons, including because he's still young and idealistic. For example, politicians bug him because they too often compromise their principles.

Nevertheless, for three months we watched Myles get up every morning and toil tirelessly for Begich. By Election Day, the poor kid was exhausted, organizing events, running phone banks, hosting visiting luminaries, and registering voters, the latter a huge part of the campaign.

In fact, the Begich campaign registered some 200 new voters just in Kotzebue this fall. In a town with 3,200 residents, with maybe a third to a half of those minors, that's huge. Myles got so frustrated, though, when young people in particular seemed indifferent to registering, much less voting. But persistence helped.

One local 18-year-old, for example, whom Begich supporters approached to register, refused on first attempt but then relented and registered on the second try.

Then on Election Day, with 15 minutes left before the polls closed, Myles and fellow campaign workers knocked on this young person's door. She hadn't yet voted. They offered her a ride to the polls. Bingo! She voted.

This fall the Begich campaign expanded democracy in rural Alaska, a significant voting block largely ignored in the past. That 18-year-old may well become a super voter and encourage others to vote because young people like herself persuaded her to vote.

Begich also helped Myles reconnect with his hometown, which he passionately loves despite having traveled around the world for the past decade, thousands of miles from his homeland but still his favorite place on earth.

Myles knocked on every single door in Kotzebue, many more than once and even more than twice. The Washington Post came knocking on Myles's door in Kotzebue this fall and then published a page 1 story featuring him and others working Begich's grassroots re-election campaign. The senator called Myles to thank him, followed in the mail by a signed copy of the story.

Myles's face lit up when he said, "Mark Begich called me today." His younger brother Trevor, a freshman at the University of Alaska Fairbanks, also got to introduce Begich to some local hardhats. (Trevor learned welding at Mt. Edgecumbe High School in Sitka through the University of Alaska, offering him cred with these guys.)

Such little things set Begich apart from many other public figures. As the late Tip O'Neill related in his memoir, people love to be thanked. The senator took time out of a hectic campaign schedule to thank one of his obscure, far-flung campaign workers toiling away in a remote corner of Alaska.

Begich also asked his mom to campaign for him in Kotzebue. Myles escorted Pegge Begich around town to greet voters at the post office, meet with local elders, and take a selfie in front of the Kotzebue sign on newly renovated Front Street.

She is such a nice lady," Myles said later.

When we spoke with Mrs. Begich, it was obvious she's a super mom, left with six kids to raise after her late husband, Rep. Nick Begich (D-Alaska), was lost in a plane crash while campaigning for re-election in 1972. Many people don't know that Mark skipped college to helped Mom with her Anchorage businesses. When we told Mrs. Begicch we wished Mark all the best in his re-election bid, she looked straight into our eyes.

'He loves what he does," she said. "He loves his job. We suspect we have not seen the last of Mark Begich. Ironically, his defeat may well make him one of Alaska's most popular public figures.

He certainly inspired our son to posit more faith in politicians. Susan Andrews and John Creed are journalism/humanities professors at Chukchi College, a UAF branch campus in Kotze-

To Elim Native Corp., Elim IRA Council, and Elim City Council, I would like to apologize for being one of the people that brought marijuana and alcohol to the community. This is kind of hard to try and think of what to write on this apology let-

I am going through treatment right now and I am trying to change my ways and one of the ways to change is to try to right all the wrongs I did in life and I feel that I wrong the village of Elim by bringing what was illegal to the village and I would like to make amends to the village.

I am a recovering addict/alcoholic and I would like to change and stay away from alcohol and drugs and it is going to be a challenge for me because that was all I knew.

I would like to also apologize for trying to take everything you guys did for me for granted. I would like you to know that I am not trying to sound good just so I can look better to the village. There is a possibility I might relapse. That is why I will need help from a support group and the church if the church is willing I will ask them. I hope that you all will accept my apologies. Thank you all. Always, Wade Eric Daniels Elim, AK

Chief's Notes

By John Papasodora, Nome police chief

It's come upon the holiday season again and like most people, I ask myself two questions: 1) Where did the year go? and 2) How long will it take to write 2015 rather than 2014?

It's been a busy year for all sectors of our community, but I'm especially thankful for the involvement of so many people in making Nome a better and safer place to live. To all our partners at Kawerak, Nome Community Center, Norton Sound Health Corporation, Bering Sea Women's Group, Anvil Mountain Correctional Complex, Behavioral Health Services, Alaska State Troopers, Office of Children's Services, Nome Emergency Shelter Team, District Attorney's Office, Alaska Court System, Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department, Nome Volunteer Fire Department, City of Nome, and all of our non-profit partners, I offer the thanks of myself and our collective department. I am also thankful for and recognize the group of dedicated professionals at our department who take and respond to the calls from the community and who commit themselves to professional public safety services to this community. Most of all, we would like to thank each and every member of the community for taking the time to call to help us help you.

As the list above will demonstrate, we (the department) have formed close working relationships with our partners to enhance and improve services to the community. In all of the places I have worked (and that has been quite a few), we are fortunate to have so many people who care so much. I would encourage all people to look around them and just extend a 'thank you for all you do' to someone you know who has committed to making our community a better place. I'm sure that few hear that phrase often enough. And though it may be a bit selfish on my part to take this valuable space in the Nome Nugget for this purpose, here is a short list of only some of those who deserve thanks for helping during 2014:

- Nancy McGuire (Nome Nugget), Rick Schmidt (KNOM) for your tireless efforts to inform the people and issue timely public safety information to help
- The ENTIRE staff at the Nome Court: Judge Dooley, Magistrate Lewis, Tracy, Brodie...to list a few... that provide that element of justice and equality for all.

- John Earthman, Tom Jamgochian, Mo and staff who protect and serve the needs of victims.
- The Nome Common Council Denise Michels, Stan Anderson, Jerald Brown, Randy Pomeranz, Tom Sparks, Louie Green Sr., Matt Culley - thank you for the support and making public safety a priority.
- City Manager Josie Bahnke, City Clerk Tom Moran and the ENTIRE staff of the City - who dedicate each day towards providing the services the community needs to keep us safe and secure.
- Berda Wilson, Bridie Trainor, Danielle Slingsby, Bobby Evans, Traci Mc-Garry, Sue Steinacher and an entire host of committed people who all work together to provide services and compassion to the adults and children in our community.
- Sergeant Charlie Cross and the crew at the Nome Post Alaska State Troopers, who are always vigilant and ready to support NPD and the community in
- · Sandy Martinson, Mike Dunham, Chris Agloinga and all our partners in corrections, probation and juvenile justice that give opportunities and 'second chances' to those at risk.
- This list could continue forever (like Santa's) but one last thank you TO THE PEOPLE OF OUR COMMUNITY...for caring.

The public safety message this week is very short and concise. Care about others. Try to bring an element of hope and happiness into the lives of just one person each day. Commit yourself to random acts of kindness and commit to helping others. Through your deeds express the meaning of this season and the hopes and dreams of the future to another. In doing so, you may turn a life around; may turn someone towards a beacon of hope and from a life of despair; and in your own way influence the destiny of just one person.

Thank you for 2014. Be safe this holiday season.

Nome Common Council ratifies labor agreements

By Sandra L. Medearis

Utility and City workers will start the new year with new compensation packages in place after the Nome Common Council unanimously approved negotiated labor contracts Dec. 16. They will get pay raises on each New Year's Day for three years.

Pay increases of 2 percent per year will go into effective retroactively to Jan.1, 2014 for workers represented by three unions at Nome Joint Utility System, and run to Dec. 31, 2016.

NJUS signed a contract with the Alaska Public Employees Association that represents employees in the NJUS administration offices and in the water and sewer department. Straight-time hourly rate for this contract starts at $11.30 for a new employee at the lowest range and goes to $35.57 at Range 19 and five years.

A contract negotiated with International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 302, pays new hires as follows: operator, $32.90; mechanic, $32.90; chief mechanic, $34.95; plant foreman, 36.19. Probationary employees will receive 95 percent of the base hourly rate applicable to their position.

A contract with International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers starts power line distribution employees at the following base hourly wages: lineman, $34.34; wireman, $34.34; line foreman, $37.77; and line superintendent, 38.46. The rate for seasonal help is $22.50 per hour.

Current NJUS employees will receive 2 percent increase retroactive to Jan. 1, and another 2 percent effective Jan. 1 2015 and another 2 percent on Jan. 1, 2016.

For those employees represented by City of Nome Employees Association after their current contract ends Dec. 31, the new agreement also raises the hourly wage by 2 percent for each of the next three years for employees who have not reached seven years longevity. Employees at Step G or above will have their base hourly rate of pay increased by 3 percent each year of the contract to coincide with the employee's anniversary date. Each employee will receive a $500 lump sum payment on Jan. 1 of the next three years as a regional differential payment.

The new base rate pay will cost the City of Nome general fund budget an additional $150,000 annu-

Barrow man indicted in Nome for killing assistant DA

By Diana Haecker

A Nome grand jury last week indicted Barrow resident Ronald Fischer on charges related to the murder of Assistant District Attorney Brian Sullivan, 48, on Dec. 8 in Barrow.

The grand jury in Nome indicted the 47-year-old Fischer on murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree and one count of assault in the third degree.

The charges stem from Dec. 8 when Sullivan was killed in an apartment occupied by Mabel Kaleak in Barrow. A police affidavit states in the charging documents that Sullivan was shot twice in the face with a 20gauge shotgun from a distance estimated at 10 feet as he was seated on the couch, with feet crossed in front of him. The affidavit states Sullivan was unarmed.

According to charging documents, Sullivan and Mabel Kaleak had been dating for less than a month. Defendant Ronald J. Fischer formerly had been in a personal relationship with Kaleak. At the time of Sullivan's murder, Fischer had a restraining order to not be close to Kaleak's residence. A security camera confirmed him entering Kaleak's building on Dec. 8. Kaleak was in the apartment, heard the shots and hid in the bedroom closet. When Fischer found her, she was afraid he would shoot her too and "lunged at Ronald and held onto him tight—to keep the gun compressed between them so he could not point it and shoot," reads the police affidavit.

Mabel Kaleak managed to escape, ran outside, got into Sullivan's running car and drove to the police station. Fischer got into his truck and drove away. Fischer contacted North Slope Borough Police dispatch and said he wanted to surrender. He was arrested by NSB police at 11:57 p.m., two hours and 15 minutes after

Region gains marine advocacy program

By Diana Haecker

The prospect of increased marine shipping through the Bering Strait and Norton Sound due to climatechange driven summer sea ice deprompted the regional non-profit Kawerak Inc. to create a new program that aims to advocate for the marine environment, subsistence resources and the people that depend on it.

Austin Ahmasuk of Nome was recently hired to fill the position of the Marine Advocate, assisted by Marine Program Specialist Freida

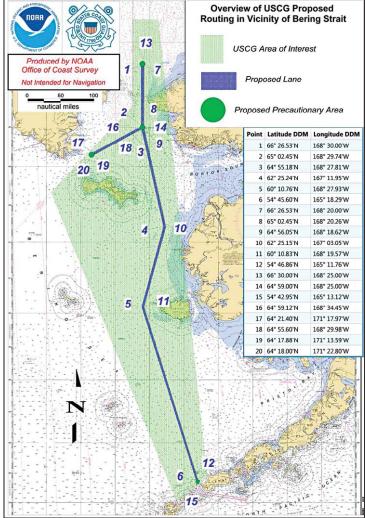

Moon-Kimoktoak.

The ice-free Arctic waters in the summer attracted not only the attention of global shipping and resource companies, but also caused worries by regional residents of the impact the increase in traffic through the waters might have on subsistence ac-

Ahmasuk said in an interview with the Nome Nugget last week that this lies at the core of the creation of the new marine advocacy program.

Justice for Waylon Zachary Okpealuk Dear Editor.

We will not give up on our son "Waylon Z. Okpealuk." We want justice for him. For the reason that it was premeditated murder. Just as it was when there was the premeditated assault upon him.

Our mistake was we didn't report the assault.

The assault was well thought out before he barged in to our home to his room; and now just as guilty as the premeditated assault. He was witnessed pacing back and forth some time after the assault. That draws suspicions that he lost the fight and could not bear to lose her. That if he could not have her, neither would our son. I cannot dispute that he had perhaps fallen in love with her, his ex-girlfriend. That was too unbearable so there it is beyond the reasonable doubt, "Jealousy." He carried it out, premeditated murder, we know he (our son) would never commit suicide.

Sincerely, Allan and Sally Okpealuk Brevig Mission, AK 99785 Dear Editor:

NJUS CFO speaks out

My name is Mike Cusack and I am the CFO for Nome Joint Utility System. NJUS is experiencing a cash shortfall at this time, which is causing concern for our partner, the City, and our consumers.

I would like to tell you a little about my qualifications and more about NJUS.

I came to NJUS as a consultant in September, 1999, and became the CFO in May, 2000. After becoming a Certified Public Accountant in 1974 I managed my own accounting office for 14 years. During that time we audited 11 Rural Electric Cooperatives, 8 municipalities,5 public schools, a college, a Savings and Loan and several private businesses. After selling my accounting practice I worked as the CFO for a Rural Electric Cooperative for 10 years. After retiring from the REC I became a consultant for Professional Computer Systems (PCS) in Denison, Iowa. PCS sent me to Nome to assist with computer and accounting problems. John hired me. Working for NJUS and living in Nome most of the time for the last 14 years has been my life.

Letters to the editor must be signed and include an address and phone number. Thank you notes and political endorsements are considered ads.

Let There Be Peace

It seems we live in crazy times where the earth is set to shake itself apart by horrible deeds and events. We wonder if our world will ever

We hear of families in war torn countries having to flee their homes and become refugees. We hear of suicide bombings claiming the lives of innocent children. We hear of girls and boys being sold into slavery. We see atrocities in the name of religion. Draconian rules are imposed on nations, and of course there are the beheadings. Deadly diseases ravage entire countries. We are so lucky to live in a safe, secure and Let us be grateful that we live in Alaska, where we have family and friends who care about us. Let us not fret over the rising price of fuel, high cost of food and cost of living. Let's take a few minutes to step outside, breathe the free, crisp and clean air and look up into the starstudded heavens and be thankful we are here, safe, sound and happy. Perhaps someday the entire world will enjoy the kind of peace we have here in our fine home in Nome. May all of our readers have a safe, happy and joy-filled holiday season that lasts an entire year.

Working for NJUS provides an opportunity to serve a great community and to face the accounting challenges of a growing utility. Working with a very kind and intelligent manager, John Handeland, has been as good as it gets. Let me tell you about the growth of NJUS.

Before telling about the growth of NJUS you should know that John Handeland has directed this growth and worked diligently with the State of Alaska, the federal government and other granting sources to obtain the funds to support the growth of NJUS. John works day and night to obtain funds and direct the various improvement projects. The projects include water and sewer system upgrades, power line extensions, a new power plant and port improvements. Nome has been blessed.

Consider these facts about NJUS. The audit reports and our books show that our total assets at December 31, 2000 were $51,627,976 and equity was $46,335,474. Total assets at December 31, 2013 were $133,981,064 and equity was $102,380,765. Growth has come from contributed capital, long-term financing and utility operations (rate payers). A study of NJUS financial statements will help the reader to understand the complex nature of a utility that has experienced tremendous growth.

At the end of each of the years that I have served as the CFO we have been audited by an independent auditing firm from Anchorage. The firm was known as Mikunda, Cottrell & Co. After a merger, our au-

Oil sheen reported near Shishmaref

The Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation said that the oil sheen that was reported on the sea ice on June 4 has returned. DEC issued a situation report that stated that the sheen once again appeared on Dec. 15. It was noticed by the community's Village Public Safety Officer Barrett Eningowuk, who also noted a gasoline odor in the area.

The type or the amount of the petroleum product is unknown as is the cause of the release. DEC established a unified command, made up of federal, state and local agencies. One DEC responder was to arrive in Shishmaref and the Coast Guard has hired Emerald Alaska as a response contractor to perform a site assessment. According to a DEC press release, DEC, Coast Guard and Emerald personnel were onsite on Dec. 19 to investigate the sheen source.

Military tracks Santa

JOINT BASE ELMENDORF-RICHARDSON- The North American Aerospace Defense Command's Alaskan NORAD Region (ANR) will play a significant role in tracking Santa this year as part of the NORAD Tracks Santa program. The NORAD Tracks Santa program began in 1955 after a phone call was made to the Continental Air Defense Command Operations Center in Colorado Springs, Colo. The call was from a local youngster who dialed a misprinted telephone number in a local newspaper advertisement. Instead of reaching Santa, the phone number put kids through to the CONAD Commander-in-Chief's operations "hotline." The Director of Operations at the time, Colonel Harry Shoup, had his staff check the radar for indications of Santa making his way south from the North Pole. Children who called were given updates on his location, and a tradition was born. In 1958, the governments of Canada and the United States created a bi-national air defense command for North America called the North American Aerospace Defense Command, also known as NORAD, which then took on the tradition of tracking Santa.

The NORAD Tracks Santa program has grown immensely since first presented on the Internet in 1998. The website receives millions of unique visitors from hundreds of countries and territories around the world. In addition, a live Operations Center is occupied for 25 hours with more than 1,200 volunteers each year who receive hundreds of thousands of phone calls and emails from families around the world. To track Santa go to http://www.noradsanta.org.

NOAA issues 2014 Arctic Report Card

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration issued the 2014 Arctic report card and . Since 2008, the annual report describes the current state of the physical and biological Arctic environmental system and illustrates that change continues to occur throughout the system.

The headlines of the report card are that the warming Arctic atmosphere was strongly connected to lower latitudes in early 2014 causing cold air outbreaks into the eastern USA and warm air intrusions into Alaska and northern Europe.

Polar bears numbers in western Hudson Bay and the southern Beaufort Sea are decreasing because of a decrease of sea ice.

Sea surface temperatures and primary production are increasing as the sea ice retreats throughout the Arctic Ocean.

Snow cover extent in April 2014 in Eurasia was the lowest since 1967 and sea ice extent in September was the sixth lowest since 1979. The tundra is "browning" as the length of the growing season is decreasing in Eurasia, but maximum tundra greenness and biomass are increasing across the Arctic.

On the Greenland ice sheet nearly 40 percent of the surface experienced melting conditions in summer 2014 and the reflectivity reached a new record low in August.

The report says that the mean annual air temperature continues to increase in the Arctic, at a rate of warming that is more than twice that at lower latitudes. In winter (January-March) 2014, this Arctic amplification of global warming was manifested by periods of strong connection between the Arctic atmosphere and mid-latitude atmosphere due to a weakening of the polar vortex. In Alaska, this led to statewide temperature anomalies of more than 10°C in January, due to warm air advection from the south. On January 27. Nome saw a record high temperature of 51°F. While Alaska melted, the eastern North America and Russia temperatures were 5°C colder than normal, due to cold air advection from the north.

In April 2014, a new record low snow cover extent for the satellite era (1967-2014) occurred in Eurasia and, in September 2014, minimum sea ice extent was the 6th lowest in the satellite record (1979-2014). But, in 2014, there were modest increases in the age and thickness of sea ice relative to 2013. The eight lowest sea ice extents since 1979 have occurred in the last eight years (2007-2014).

The report card also points out that there is growing evidence that polar bears are being adversely affected by the changing sea ice in those regions where there are good data. Between 1987 and 2011 in western Hudson Bay, Canada, a decline in polar bear numbers, from 1,194 to 806, was due to earlier sea ice break-up, later freeze-up and, thus, a shorter sea ice season. In the southern Beaufort Sea, polar bear numbers had stabilized at ~900 by 2010 after a ~40 percent decline since 2001. However, survival of sub-adult bears declined during the entire period. Polar bear condition and reproductive rates have also declined in the southern Beaufort Sea, unlike in the adjacent Chukchi Sea, immediately to the west, where they have remained stable for 20 years. There are also now twice as many ice-free days in the southern Beaufort Sea as there are in the Chukchi

As the sea ice retreats in summer and previously ice-covered water is exposed to solar radiation, sea surface temperature and upper ocean temperatures in all the marginal seas of the Arctic Ocean are increasing. The most significant linear trend is in the Chukchi Sea, where the sea surface temperature is increasing at a rate of 0.5°C per decade. In sum-

On land, peak tundra greenness, a measure of vegetation productivity that is strongly correlated with above-ground biomass, continues to increase. On the other hand, greenness integrated over the entire growing season indicates that a browning and a shorter growing season have occurred over large areas of the tundra since 1999. In Eurasia, in particular, these conditions have coincided with a decline in summer air temperatures ally or around $450,000 for the three-year labor agreement, according to figures provided by Josephine Bahnke, city manager.

The Council had the pay packages before them at an earlier meeting, but balked at approval until they received specifics on the costs of each position from Bahnke and John K. Handeland, utility manager. Both managers provided them with a hefty 179 pages of contract particulars.

Councilmembers approved the contracts unanimously without comment.

A list of employee compensations provided the Council that included salaries and benefits for approximately 72 City employees totaled almost $6 million out of the City's 2015 budget. That is roughly 53 percent of the City of Nome General Fund Budget, dropping out the $284,351 in Port of Nome employee compensation, covered by the Port of Nome 2015 budget. The Port is an enterprise of the City, which earns and spends revenue separately.

The salary of the port project manager, Joy Baker, appeared as $39,600, which would be a significant drop in pay, except that the small print explains that the amount is for the six-month shipping season.

During citizen's comments, Chuck Wheeler asked for additional information on whether Baker received compensation for airfare, lodging, vehicle or consultation fees during the off-season. Following the meeting, Bahnke explained that Baker receives additional money from port project funds, but for specifics, asked for a written open records information request. Baker also receives port money while wearing the port director's hat for about 20 percent of her job time, Bahnke said.

The Nugget has complied with a letter to Bahnke and Council members asking for the total of general fund money and City of Nome project money going to the harbor project manager and city manager positions. The list of compensations for City positions also gave a lump sum-$367,614-for finance employees without a breakdown on positions-finance director, three account technicians and one account clerk. The Nugget has also asked for any expenses and compensation paid for port and finance department employees who live out of state, as well as a list of consultants on the City's the killing of Sullivan. According to court documents, Fischer is not unknown to the court system. His record shows 20 criminal convictions and several recent domestic violence cases pending.

The case was assigned to Assistant Attorney General James Favette. working at the office of Special Prosecutions, who requested the case be heard in front of a Nome grand jury rather than the Barrow grand jury because Assistant DA Brian Sullivan had been presenting a dozen cases as recently as November 21 to the current Barrow grand jury panel which was seated in September. Fayette also argued that the substantial pretrial publicity, both formal by professional media and informal by internet social media, would have influenced the grand jurors. "Under these circumstances, any true bill of indictment issued in this case will be susceptible to a post-indictment challenge based upon a claim that this grand jury panel was biased against Fischer by Mr. Sullivan's unique role - not merely an acquaintance of one or two of the grand jurors – but as the entire panel's actual legal advisor," wrote Fayette. The grand jury did convene in Nome.

The grand jury indictment was sent to Barrow and Judge Michael Jeffery arraigned Fischer on Monday morning.

Judge Jeffery formally appointed the public defender agency to represent Fischer.

Fischer's attorney Mark Billingsley at the Fairbanks Public Defender Agency entered "not guilty" pleas for Fischer. A pretrial hearing was set for February 12, 2015 at 3 p.m. in Barrow, and a trial date was set for March 9, 2015.

The Attorney General's office announced last week that a fund for the daughters of Sullivan has been established to allow the public and Brian's colleagues to donate in his memory.

The statement said that Sullivan had worked in the district attorney's office in Barrow since 2012 and formed a strong bond with the small Arctic community.

Prior to taking the post in Barrow, he had worked as a private attorney in the Mat-Su Borough and served in the military as a paratrooper and JAG lawyer. He also served four years in the Washington House of Representatives.

Deputy Attorney General Richard Svobodny described Sullivan as active in his local community, including his local church. "Brian wanted to expose himself to other cultures—something he had experienced in the military and wanted to continue," said Deputy Attorney General Svobodny. "This is what drew him to Barrow and to the people. He became involved right away and had made Barrow his home."

Sullivan leaves behind three daughters, ages 19, 16 and 14. The fund was established in Brian's memory to benefit his children.

His family has asked that in lieu of gifts or flowers, individuals give money in Brian's name to the memorial fund or to organizations that assist victims of violent crimes. ## Bristol Bay protected from oil and gas lease sales

On December 16, the Obama Administration announced a landmark decision to remove the North Aleutian Basin from the federal Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program. This in effect protects Bristol Bay and the southeast Bering Sea, the region's fishing grounds, and world's largest wild salmon run from offshore development. President Obama has removed the area from future oil and gas development under Section 12(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act. In an address posted on YouTube, President Barack Obama said that he took action to protect one of America's greatest resources and a massive economic engine, namely Bristol Bay. "It's a beautiful natural wonder and something too precious for us to be putting out to the highest bidder," President Obama said.

Because of the work done by local people advocating for Bristol Bay's integrity, Obama could take action, he said. In a press release, the Alaska Marine Conservation Council stated that Bristol Bay and the southeast Bering Sea represent over 40 percent of U.S. domestic seafood production valued at more than $2 billion annually, including salmon, red king crab, herring and groundfish such as pollock and cod. All four Pacific salmon species migrate through Bristol Bay every year on their way to spawning grounds throughout western Alaska. In 2014, the Alaska Department of Fish and Game reported that 40.9 million sockeye returned to Bristol Bay. Commercial fishermen were paid $197 million for their catch destined for a global marketplace.

Build-A-Plane program takes flight at NACTEC

By Diana Haecker

A most unusual sight could be seen at the Nome-Beltz mechanic shop recently when four female high school students clad in dark blue mechanic coveralls, intently worked to wrench parts off a greasy plane engine.

One of the girls was Samantha Penayah. She is a 10-grader from Savoonga on St. Lawrence Island. Living there, aviation is a crucial part of survival to bring in supplies, groceries and to fly out patients who need medical help in Nome or Anchorage. Samantha attended an automotives engine repair class at NACTEC and was able to return to tember, which brought together representatives from regional tribes and municipalities to ponder how to best prepare for increased shipping traffic through their prime subsistence hunting grounds. Ahmasuk said the workshop, its pending report and additional information gleaned from other Kawerak division's work would form the basis of a regional plan to communicate to the world the priorities of this region and its residents. "The main focus of that plan is to bring local issues into the various ocean policy forums," said Ahmasuk. Those forums include the U.S. Arctic Research Commission. the International Maritime Organization, the U.S. Coast Guard, Joint Ocean Commission, State Department and White House ocean commissions and co-management groups.

Ahmasuk said that one of the first things on his to-do list is to comment on the recent release of a draft of the Coast Guard's Port Access Route Study. The Coast Guard posted the Port Access Route Study for the Chukchi Sea, Bering Strait and Bering Sea on the Federal Register on December 5.

According to U.S. Coast Guard Lt. Kody Stitz, the goal of the study is to help reduce the risk of maritime casualties and increase the efficiency of commercial vessel traffic movement, in anticipation of increasing vessel traffic in the region. The U.S. Coast Guard began the study in 2010.

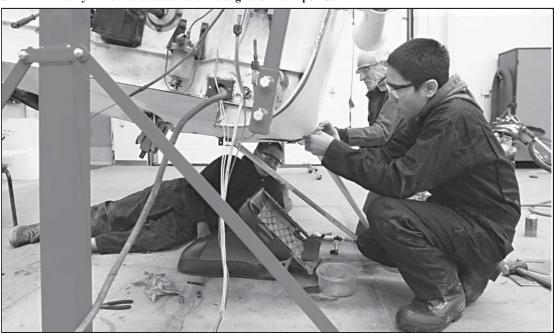

"Over the last couple of years the Coast Guard has used the best available data to develop the route we are now proposing as a possible route through the Bering Sea/Strait," said Lt. Stitz in an email to the Nugget. "We are now soliciting public comment how this specific route will benefit or impact the region." The comment period opened Dec. 5 and will run through June 3, 2015.

Ahmasuk said he would request a public hearing to be held in Alaska, preferably in a hub community such as Nome.

her home community with useful information. "I taught my younger brother how to change the oil on our four-wheeler," she said.

Sam also attended the first builda-plane program course last summer and signed up for the second course because she would like to become a pilot.

As the girls tinkered with the plane's engine, students Wyatt Saccheus and Alec Johnson worked with veteran pilot and Airframe and Powerplant Mechanic Vic Olsen to pry a latch off the plane.

Olsen has been working with the students to rebuild the 1962 Piper Colt.

Wyatt Saccheus from Elim and Alec Johnson from Nome also envision a career in aviation.

The students were from Nome, Elim, Savoonga and Gambell and were part of the aviation course taught at the Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Center in Nome from Dec. 1 to Dec. 12.

The aviation courses are a threepart series of trainings that involved "Introduction to flight", "Aviation Powerplant", referring to engine work, and the yet to be held course in "Aviation Airframe", referring to work on the fuselage.

"The goal is to expose students to aviation and to some of the jobs in this region," said Instructor Jake Fis-

NACTEC Director Doug Walrath said that student surveys over the last several years have revealed interest in vocational training in the aviation field, as well as in health and construction.

"Aviation was always in the top 3 choices," said Walrath.

The Alaska Airman's Association donated money to buy the Piper Colt for $3,000 to be taken apart by the NACTEC aviation students, fixed and rebuild from the ground up.

NACTEC director Walrath said, they have received a $56,000 grant from the Dept. of Labor and Workforce Development to provide a series of Aviation courses intended to expose students to careers as Airframe and Powerplant Mechanics. Local airlines also chipped in and donated money to buy parts and necessary supplies to achieve the task.

Aside from hands-on mechanical skills, the students start their day with introductions into First Aid and CPR training, swimming and developing a career plan that includes work on a resume, a cover letter and detailed plan of how to achieve the necessary education to qualify for a job in the aviation field. In June, NACTEC will offer the last aviation course in the three-part series.

Walrath said there is an international shortage of qualified airframe and powerplant mechanics. Russell Rowe, chief pilot for helicopters at Bering Air confirmed that it is an ongoing challenge to find qualified people. "Everybody wants to be a pilot but there are a lot of other jobs like cleaner positions, cargo, A&P mechanics, mechanic helpers, accountants, customer service positions and so on," Rowe said.

Rowe said the pilots can come through the ranks and are built up in-house from an existing workforce that proves to be steady and reliable.

It is not unusual that somebody startsworking in cargo, moves on to become a mechanic helper and then a mechanic or pilot.

Mechanics and pilots require federal certifications. The University of Alaska at Anchorage and Fairbanks offer a pilot and mechanic program.

Christmas at a Swedish castle

By Keith Conger

Travel is something the Bering Strait School District's itinerant art teacher does very well. Robin Child spends her winters as an instructor bringing wonderful art projects to the youth of the Seward Peninsula, and her summers as an ice-climbing guide in Wrangell-St. Alias National Park. She embodies that Eleanor Roosevelt philosophy of tasting experiences to the utmost. Eight years ago, while traveling the world, she had the most interesting Christmas of her life.

At the time, Child says she was a researcher/student studying abroad in Asia. She had spent time exploring Nepal, was learning the Tibetan language, and was studying a branch of Buddhism. A major source of her fieldwork came as a photographer for a nonprofit organization. One of her most interesting assignments was to work with a set of monks who had acted as art protectorates when China was destroying much of Tibet's cultural icons.

Child was able to photograph protected art works called Thangkas — complicated cultural pictures that were either painted or embroidered on pieces of textile. These textiles were pictorial records of important historical religious or doctrinal information. For years the monks had sewn the Thangkas into their robes, hiding them from their oppressors as they worked in the fields.

In the fall of 2006 Child presented the findings of her work in India, after which she had planned to take a take a break from Asia. But, she was not quite ready to head back to the states, and wanted to spend Christmas on the road. She was reminded by a family member that a cousin she had grown up with in Colorado was now living in Linkoping, Sweden. So, she went to spend the holidays with cousin Riley and her husband Henrik.

Riley had a unique occupation. She was the caretaker of a 12th century castle — one of those story book types — dark, dank, super cold, with a moat around it (although the moat no longer held water). The castle did not receive visitors during the winter, but served as a tourist attraction in the warmer months.

Her cousin and husband actually lived in the caretaker's cottage adjacent to the moat. Child was pleased to have access to it, and was most impressed with the classic standing armored statue. One of her most striking observations about that holiday was it was a low snow year, and this was the first time in her life she would not have a white Christmas.

The people of Sweden celebrate Christmas day at a Julbord – a Scandinavian smorgasbord extravaganza. Long, overloaded tables are filled with Nordic delicacies such as herring, ham, meatballs, sauces, cheeses, and breads. Child remembers being very full by the end of the day.

Child says the Swedes had some of the same holiday practices as we do in the U.S., such as Santa and Christmas trees, but they had one very unusual tradition.

In Sweden, there is a custom of gathering the entire family to sit down for a viewing of the 1958 Walt Disney Christmas special "From All of Us to All of You," also known as Kalle Anka och hans vanner onskar God Jul.

Who better to wish you a Merry Christmas, but Donald Duck and his friends!

A Christmas under the snow

By Genevieve Wheeler

This is yet another fascinating story about life in early Nome taken from the archives of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum in Nome. Here is a special holiday treat.

It appears that "A Christmas Under the Snow" by Genevieve Wheeler was written about Christmas in Nome at some point between 1899 and 1902. It's fun and sometimes a little confusing trying to read your way through the old style of English.

Those who like plenty of snow on Christmas should spend the day at the mining camp known as the City of Nome in Alaska where they will be literally under it, for the huge snowdrifts cover many of the houses completely, making it necessary to tunnel to the doors. Christmas here comes in the darkest season of the year; the sun appears just above the horizon, shines a short time and then disappears again making the winter almost devoid of daylight. The Bering Sea is frozen for miles and as far as the eye can see great hills of ice covered with fine snow are piled high on the ice-bound ocean.

Of course there is snow—vast quantities of it. The average fall is about six feet, but this drifts and covers entirely many small dwellings and reaches to the second-story windows of the larger ones, and sometimes even higher. This snow is very fine almost flour-like especially that which comes with a blizzard, and it packs solidly as it falls.

During the winter of which I write there were in the neighborhood of six thousand persons at Nome and distributed throughout the adjacent district; many of these were unprepared for the intense cold and were obliged to dwell in thinly boarded houses, and some even attempted to live in tents. Scores of small dwellings were completely buried in the snow-drifts, and as the snow deepened the occupants were obliged to keep adding extra stovepipe so as to keep the top of the pipe above the drift.

A number of times the occupants of some of those small houses lost their lives through their neglect of this precaution. They lighted the fires before going to bed. When the snow stopped, the pipes and the gas and smoke, finding no outlet were driven down into the house and caused death by suffocation. Some of the accompanying pictures show the tunnels leading to the snow-covered houses. Some of the tunnels were 200 feet long in length under the snowdrifts, and they furnished the only means of entrance or exit. Cows and horses also were stabled in quarters deep under the snow, using similar tunnels to come and go.

The approach of Christmas in this cold bleak Northland is in strange contrast with the Christmas season in the United States. There is of course, a complete absence of the rush and bustle of the busy cities with their toy-dressed store windows and in this far-away spot one cannot rest the eyes upon holly, the ivy and the Christmas tree. Nevertheless, many parents had brought their children young and old, and where little children are there, Christmas must be kent.

To celebrate this day of days in fitting manner was the great question. The country surrounding Nome is wholly deserted of trees, so to obtain Christmas trees it became necessary to make a trip of 175 miles over the ice by sled, but men were ready for this emergency, and the trees were secured. These hardy fellows started off about December 10, and returned to Nome several days before Christmas. The trees were spruce from five to ten feet high, and were sold from $5 to $25 for each tree. With Christmas at hand, toys and ornaments must be obtained. The town was well canvassed and everything resembling a toy was secured, as well as a lot of material from which to make toys. Mothers made up rag dolls, and many pretty and useful gifts were made for young and old, so that neither the little ones, who hung up their stockings on Christmas Eve, nor their elders were disappointed.

Even the Eskimos were not forgotten, for at the little church, the only one in camp, a festival was held, and from the Christmas trees the native children and their parents received their first gifts when the distribution took place. The church was decorated with paper flowers in place of real ones.

In the preparation of the Christmas dinner, which is not a pleasant nor easy task in the cold land, the housewife had her troubles, and serious troubles enough some of them proved to be. Many days before Christmas the making of the plum pudding was in progress. Water is delivered here in cans costing 25¢ a can, and it is almost solidly frozen. The eggs, butter, popcorn, onions, apples and everything else that can possibly freeze are frozen, making the work preparing pudding and cakes anything but an easy task. The large pot of water for the pudding seems as though it never would boil, and the stove does not seem to do half its duty.

There are two things – perhaps I can call them virtues – that men and women, but especially housekeepers must learn in Alaska namely, patience and economy, the later especially in the use of water, and in this country of domestic difficulties the men must do their share of the work about the house. With Christmas trees at 45 to \$25 each, eggs \$1 a dozen, butter  $75 \, \varepsilon$  to \$1 a pound, coal more than \$100 a ton, and everything else proportionately expensive, it is easy to understand at least some of the differences between a Northland Christmas and one in the ordinary cities.

The pudding completed and boiled it was hung up, to be taken down, frozen solidly, though in the house, for reheating on Christmas Day. Turkey at Christmastime at Nome costs  $75\phi$  to \$1a pound, and, being taken from cold storage and frozen solid, it is a difficult matter even to guess, much less to determine, when the bird was last alive. The task of getting at the fowl to clean and dress it was no easy matter. It took 10 hours by the stove in cold water to thaw it out. Then after preparing it on Christmas Eve it was laid away carefully in order that it might not become too solidly frozen

Instead of crisp lettuce and celery there are canned vegetables, but appetizing salads and other tasty dishes are made as only a woman can do, and after the frozen potatoes and onions had been given a bath in boiling water for a few moments, and had the skins peeled off, and after the turkey and the cranberry sauce, with all the other good things, had been placed on the home-made dinner table covered with oilcloth, and with the plum pudding yet to come, one forgot for at least a time that one was spending Christmas Day in this most isolated region of Uncle Sam's dominions.

The first Christmas spent in this camp, and one long to be remembered, was an exceptionally clear

one. The sun appeared about midday and seemed at once to set directly south. About three o'clock in the afternoon the moon rose in all its fullness and splendor at a northerly point, making the great expanse of snow and ice on the Bering Sea sparkle like diamonds, and presenting the appearance of a veritable fairyland. At this time came also the Northern Lights, and it seemed as though the very portals of heaven had opened, bringing one in closer touch with God and his glorious infinity.

Christmas Traditions in Nome

By Angela Hansen

It's a joy to think over the traditions Peter and I have developed for our family over our 17 years of marriage. There are many things that make our Christmas celebration special but I chose to share a few of the most significant ones.

It has always been important for Peter and his family to pick out the perfect spruce tree from Council in late October, before the road closes. Tree hunting makes a fun and festive family outing! We leave the cut tree frozen outdoors until the week before Christmas and then saw off a few inches of the trunk so it will start drawing up water when we introduce it to its warm, new environment in our living room.

The first Christmas decoration we put out each year, is elegant, porcelain, white and gold Nativity, which was a gift from my parents early in our marriage. The Nativity is definitely the heart of our Christmas celebration. When my family lived in Nome in the '70s and '80s, my father made a large outdoor plywood Nativity. My parents had given it to Peter's folks when our family moved to Nebraska in the mid '80s and after Peter and I were married in the late '90s, his parents passed it on to us. I am filled with sentimental memories from my childhood whenever we display it in front of our home.

Every year, our children Gareth, Clara and Luke paint watercolors to adorn the outside of our Christmas card, filled with news of our past 12 months. This always feels like a huge endeavor to paint, write, print and send out but it is worth the effort and it makes a wonderful summarized chronicle of our life over the years.

Peter's mother started a collection of nutcrackers for him when he was a boy and we have kept up the tradition by adding one or two each year. There are so many creative themes, styles and occupations that it is hard to stop buying them! One of Peter's favorites is the gold miner complete with a shovel and pan of gold. They grace our windowsills and stand guard over the tree. The largest one is 4 ft. tall and each of our kids were excited the Christmas when they had finally grown taller than the giant nutcracker!

A few years ago, my sister sent us a stocking for Jesus to hang along with each of our stockings. We fill the stocking with notes of things we've given to Jesus, such as sponsoring children in an orphanage in Peru, shoebox gifts, buying sheep, chickens, clean water, seeds and tools for needy people around the world through organizations like World Relief and Samaritan's Purse. The kids get excited about using their own money to choose these gifts for others and it helps keep their focus on generosity rather than dwelling solely on what's wrapped up for them under the tree.

We often invite friends to a caroling party around town at the Hospital, Quyanna Care and Youth Facility to share the traditional Christmas hymns of joy and hope. Then we return home for hot apple cider, cocoa and an assortment of savory and sweet delights, visiting and playing games into the night.

Church Christmas programs and the Candlelight Service are always highlights as well. The children love to act and sing and dress up as wise men, angels or shepherds. There's something so peaceful and serenely beautiful about singing Silent Night by candlelight, worshipping the Son of God together!

Thanks for asking us to share some of our family traditions. It's a joy to be part of such a vibrant, festive community as Nome — where else do you have Christmas lights strung across Front Street all winter long? Merry Christmas and God bless each of you as we celebrate Jesus Christ, the Greatest Gift who is the Reason for the Season!

NBHS boys, girls sweep Noorvik in basketball season tip off

By Keith Conger

Nome Boys Varsity

The first question about the Nome-Beltz boys basketball team might be about how they would replace the height lost after last season. Well, the unveiling of the 2014-2015 squad answered that in a big way. The current line-up boasts three players listed at over six feet. 6 foot, 5 inch senior Wink Winkelmann, and 6 foot, 3 inch sophomore Mikey Scott, join holdover tall man 6 foot, 4 inch senior Daniel Head.

The height came in handy as the Nanooks opened their season with an 84-47 victory over a scrappy 1A Noorvik crew. Senior leadership played a big part in the team's opening night victory over the Bears as well. This was especially necessary when considering Nome only suited seven players.

Three Nanook seniors led the attack, and came close to recording season opening double-doubles. The Nanooks co-captain Klay Baker was two rebounds shy of a double-double, as he set pace for the team with 27 points off six three-pointers. Winkelmann had five offensive boards, and a total of eight. His 22 points combined with Baker's 27 alone would have been enough to hold off the Bears. Senior point guard and co-captain Alex Gray directed traffic, doled out a team high eight assists while scoring 18 points.

Nome shot nearly 58 percent from the field as a unit on Friday night, and had a total of 14 offensive rebounds. They finished the game with a 2.87 assists to turnover ratio. The Nanooks got to the line 13 times, but made only three free throws.

The NBHS scored the first seven points Saturday afternoon, and extended the lead to nine at 12-3 in what had the makings of a blowout. Although Nome finished the first quarter with a 16-9 lead, the Bears made a mad dash run mid-way through the second quarter, narrowing the gap to one point at 21-20 off a three pointer by Gene Sampson.

The Nanooks immediately responded with three's from junior Ian Booth and Baker. That spark ignited a 15-3 run. The half-time score of 36-23 was as close as the Bears were able to make it.

Eventually the zone defense wore Noorvik down, and secured an 80-57 win. Four Nanooks scored in double figures, led by Baker's 18. Although he connected on only one of six from inside the arc, Baker hit an impressive five of ten three-pointers.

Gray's gaudy eight to one assist to turnover ratio helped the Nanooks achieve a better than 2 to 1 team mark. Winkelmann led his squad with four steals. His eight boards helped Nome out rebound Noorvik 34-20. Nome got to the line 14 times, hitting nine free throws.

NBHS head coach Pat Callahan is in his 12th year at the team's helm. He says his crew will rely heavily on co-captains Gray and Baker, who have been to the state tournament each of the last three years. Callahan says that the additional talent brought by Winkelmann and Scott lends an excitement to the year. Since the two are relatively unknown to programs in the region, other schools might think that Nome will be much smaller this year. Callahan is assisted by Dan Sullivan, and Nate Perkins.

According to Noorvik head coach Wyatt Moum his team, which was missing one of its bigger players, is actually considered to be one of the taller units in conference play up in the Northwest Arctic Borough.

Nome Girls Varsity

The Nome-Beltz girls basketball team started the year with a youthful line-up. Seven of the 10 girls who suited up for this weekend's games were either freshmen or sophomores. The younger players had important roles as the ladies from NBHS outlasted the Noorvik squad 23-13 on Friday night. The Bears carried only six players.

Sophomore Sonja Hukill had a game high 7 points. Freshman Taeler Brunette, who scored her first varsity points, chipped in six. As a team the Lady Nanooks shot one for six from the line.

The Nome girls struggled in the beginning of Saturday night's game. The Bears grabbed a number of offensive boards, which they turned into a 9-4 lead at the end of the first quarter.

With her crew down 9-11 at the beginning of quarter number two, Nanooks senior Lacy Erickson scored four huge, unanswered, momentum turning points to give her team the lead at 13-11. Nome would get another two points from junior Rayne Lie to bring the score to 15-13, and carry a slim two point lead into half time.

worked. The entire second half she seemed to be around the ball. Her four third quarter points, along with Annalise Contreras' first ever varsity points — a third quarter buzzer beater — helped the team establish a 23-16 lead heading into the final period.

Stettenbenz carried her hot hand into the fourth quarter scoring six, leading to a game high 18. The team was really boosted by the ball hawking energy of freshman Sierra Tucker, who also scored her first varsity points. Hukill would score four of her six points in the final frame, as the Nanooks were able to build a comfortable 14 point lead, and take the contest 39-23.

Don Stiles, Nome-Beltz head coach, said after the games that he was happy with his team's offensive patience on Friday night even thought at times they struggled to score. He was particularly pleased with the team's defensive efforts in the second half of Saturday's game. The girls created turnovers and took advantage of their possessions. Stiles is assisted by Doug Johnson, Bivers Gologergen, and Steffen Verdin.

Stiles, who is entering his fifth year as the Lady Nanooks head coach, has been involved in Nome basketball in some capacity since 1985. He noted that he coached the parent of one of his current players back in 1993-94 when he was assistant coach to Doug Chadwick.

According to Moum, the Noorvik girls team was coming off a pair of recent losses to Kiana. They will be getting three starters back next week. The Lady Bears last went to the 1A state basketball championships in 2013.

QUARTERBACK— Nome sophomore Sonja Hukill drives the lane against the Noorvik Bears at the Nome-Beltz gym on Saturday night. Hukill's was the leading scorer with seven points in her team's victory over the Bears on Friday night. Jillian Stettenbenz's 18 points led the team to victory on Saturday.

CAUGHT STEALING – Nome-Beltz freshman Annalise Contreras steals the ball at mid-court from Noorvik's Dionne Wells at the Nome-Beltz gym on Saturday, December 20. The youthful Nanooks outlasted the Bears both Friday and Saturday.

Germans celebrate holidays with Saint Nikolas and Krampus

By Mia Siebenmorgen Cresswell

Mia Siebenmorgen Cresswell moved to Nome with her parents last summer. She got to spend one Christmas in Germany with her grandparents and tells of the customs in the following story.

In Germany, we keep track of the days leading up to Christmas by "Adventskalendar" (advent calendar). We also have wreaths with candles that we light every Sunday in December; when the candle is lighted, we sing songs and say a prayer. On the 6th of December, Nikolaus (St. Nicholas) and his scary companion "Knecht Ruprecht" or Krampus comes to visit the families of the town to see if the kids have been obedient. Good kids get chocolate, oranges, and other fruit. Krampus gives bad kids lumps of coal or sticks or takes them away in a burlap sack!

We also have "Weinachtsmarkt" (outdoor Christmas bazaar). You can get candy, cookies, toys, food, and so much more.

We have big feasts of yummy stuff like potatoes and goose.

In Germany, we open presents on Christmas Eve, on Dec. 24.

In the US, many kids open presents on the 25th, in the morning. Christmas in Germany is amazing!

When Brevig Mission experienced its first Christmas tree

By Keith Conger

"The season of Christmas was drawing near, and with it came thoughts of a Christmas tree. But whence should a Christmas tree be found in this country where there are no trees. Indeed, one could find in the valleys a species of dwarf willow, small bushes which would attain to a height of two or three feet."

The preceding passage was written by the pioneer missionary Reverend T. L Brevig in 1894 from his hut near present day Brevig Mission. In 1895 a young boy heard the story of Brevig's adventures at a Christmas dinner party in the lower 48. It sparked a life long interest in the pastor's endeavors. This boy grew up to become a doctor, and was later offered the chance to transcribe Brevig's writings. In 1944, Dr. J. Walter Johnshoy published them in a book called Apaurak in Alaska.

According to the book, in March of 1894 the Norwegian Lutheran Synod communicated with Brevig, who was living in the Midwest, about whether he would be willing to act as pastor for a few Norwegian Lapp families. The government had contracted the Lapp group to teach the native people of the Port Clarence area the art of raising reindeer.

Five Lapp families were willing to come to the region to do the instruction but only if they had access to a Norwegian Lutheran pastor. His wife approved the idea, and Brevig accepted. Mr. and Mrs. Brevig, along with their small child, arrived at what was once called Teller Reindeer Station on August 5, 1894.

Brevig had been given the secondary assignment of teacher at the government school. Later in his first year he wanted to have a Christmas celebration at the school, so he made his intent of finding a Christmas tree known to the surrounding people. In the vicinity was a young Indian boy who had once lived on the Tanana River. He had experienced Christmas trees at his former home, and understood what the pastor was trying to achieve.

The boy was able to convey the message to the locals. Some of the natives found Brevig and told him that, "...two days journey inland there was a hill where there grew several trees with beautiful branches and tall as the house (some 12 to 15 feet)."

It was decided that Mr. William

Kjellman, the leader of the Lapps and the first supervisor of the local herd, would set out on the quest. He would take one of the Lapp men, and an English speaking native guide from the Kuskowkvim. The party took a sleigh and four reindeer on a journey 70 miles into the interior. On a hill that is 15 miles southeast of what came to be known as Igloo, they located four birch trees. They took the largest one.

The birch was set up during the week prior to Christmas, and the Brevigs began to decorate the interior of their building. The tree was trimmed with popcorn and candy and adorned with candles. It was to be the centerpiece for a Christmas celebration attended by many of the 200 natives that lived nearby. Mrs. Brevig decided to practice the Christmas tradition of gift giving, so the women of the reindeer station began baking simple rolls covered with sugar.

It took some doing, but the Brevigs were able to keep the local people from seeing the decorations until they were ready. Brevig reported that it was a great joy to watch the people's reactions to the tree and its lights, even though the native people's wonder was mixed with some trepidation.

On that first Christmas night, in what is now known as Brevig Mission, Christmas hymns were sung in both English and in the Norse language. It was the first time the people of the area had heard the story of Jesus' birth.

The Christmas season continues to be a time of major importance in the modern day village that lies on the northern shore of Port Clarence Bay. According to Brevig Mission resident Pauline Olanna, the current format of celebration began in the 1960s. The annual weeklong festivities begin with a Christmas Day feast that is attended by the entire village. All age groups help prepare many delicious foods. One of the mainstays of the feast is reindeer soup, with the meat being supplied from the herd owned by Olanna's husband Leonard.

The week between Christmas and New Years is filled with outdoor races during the day. These include running races, and dog sled races when there are teams. Eskimo game competitions take place each night.

Hunting restrictions proposed for two caribou herds

WACH Working Group discusses harvest reduction at annual meeting

Sharp population declines in the Western Arctic caribou herd and the Teshekpuk caribou herd prompted the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game to submit a proposal to the state Board of Game for changes in hunting regulations to reduce the harvest in both herds. The Board of Game has agreed to consider the proposal (number 202) as an addition to the agenda for its Southcentral region meeting March 13-17, 2015 in Anchorage.

The proposal cites the following results of ADF&G's 2013 caribou census. The WAH census showed a population of 235,000 animals, a 27 perecent decline since 2011, and a 50 percent decline from 2003 to 2013. Population counts of the TCH in 2013 showed a 42 percent herd reduction since 2011, and a 53 percent decline since 2008.

Proposal 202 notes that population estimates from the 2013 census for the WAH and TCH were completed after the January 2014 report to the Board of Game at the Arctic and Western Region meeting in Kotzebue. The next regularly scheduled board meeting for the Arctic and Western region is in 2016.

"Since both herds have significant range overlap during their seasonal movements, it would be best to consider both herds simultaneously when considering regulatory changes," the proposal states. "If hunting in either herd continues without harvest restriction, over harvest will likely occur and recovery of the population will be delayed."

The WAH migrates over a 140,000 square mile area that includes the Seward Peninsula and is bounded by the Arctic Ocean, the lower Yukon River and the trans-Alaska pipeline. The indigenous people in communities within its range depend on the herd as a staple food source. The TCH is an important subsistence resource to residents of the North Slope. The herd's calving grounds surround Teshekpuk Lake, located about 80 miles east of Barrow.

Proposal 202 asks the Board of Game to implement the following changes beginning in regulatory year 2015—the next hunting season—in all game management units associated with the WAH and TCH. (1) Shorten the non-resident season; (2) set a one-bull bag limit for non-residents; (3) close the non-resident cow season; (4) stop airborne hunting in GMU 22, which includes the Seward Peninsula; and (5) prohibit the take of calves by all hunters.

WACH working group

The regulatory changes recommended in Proposal 202 are consistent with guidelines developed by the Western Arctic Caribou Herd Working Group for WAH herd management at levels determined by population size, trend and harvest

The working group is composed of 20 voting representatives of communities and user groups dependent on the WAH. They are subsistence hunters from rural villages, non-local hunters, conservationists, hunting guides, reindeer herders and hunter transporters. The working group appointed Charlie Lean to the Nome seat at an annual meeting held Dec. 16-18 in Anchorage. Lean replaces Roy Ashenfelter, a former working group chairman who retired last year after serving as Nome's representative for a decade.

The working group is a forum for sharing information and making regulatory or policy recommendations to the Alaska Board of Game, the Federal Subsistence Board and federal agencies that manage land in the WAH range. Representatives of ADF&G, the Bureau of Land Management, the National Park Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service serve as non-voting members of the working group.

population of 200,000 to 265,000 animals with an annual harvest of 14,000-18,500 animals. In additional to regulatory changes included in Proposal 202, the conservative management plan calls for voluntary reduction in cow harvests by residents and for limiting the subsistence harvest of bulls only when necessary to maintain a minimum 40:100 bull:cow ratio.

The working group also has developed preservative management recommendations for a WAH population of 130,000 to 200,000 animals with an annual harvest of 8,000 to 12,000 caribou. Preservative harvest recommendations may include (1) No harvest of calves; (2) limit the harvest of cows by resident hunters through permit hunts and/or village quotas; (3) limit the subsistence harvest of bulls to maintain at least 40 bulls:100 cows; and (4) restrict the harvest to residents only, according to state and federal law. The plan adds that closure of some federal land to non-qualified users may be necessary.

Unalakleet students learned to collar caribou at Onion Portage

By Laurie McNicholas

Last September six Unalakleet high school students gained hands-on learning experience in placing radio collars on caribou at Onion Portage on the Koyuk River with the help of biologists. Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game biologists have conducted research on the Western Arctic caribou herd every fall for decades at Onion Portage.

"Going there helped us understand how much work the biologists do to study the herd," said Jolene Nanouk of Unalakleet, who chaperoned the students. Nanouk and students Kirstian Haugen and Bobbi Storms presented a report on the Onion Portage Youth Participation Project at the annual meeting of the Western Alaska Caribou Herd Working Group Dec. 18 in Anchorage.

"For most of the students, it was their first time seeing caribou, and for a few of them, it was their first time camping," Nanouk said. "At first we were nervous to go, but by the end after a few days there they wanted to camp longer. We thank all who were there for their kindness and generosity and for making us feel welcome and just accepting us for who we are."

The Unalakleet group flew to Ambler and was transported to their campsite. "We spent the first day setting up camp," said Haugen.

"The second day was cold and rainy." She said the students spent nine hours on the riverbank watching for caribou with binoculars and learning about gear they would use. On day three caribou were spotted and the students donned lifejackets, got into boats and headed downriver, she reported.

"I held the tail, my partner held the head, and the boys collared caribou," Haugen said. "I reported the sex. The next day we packed up to go back to Unalakleet and saw thousands of caribou."

"We loved eating fresh caribou every day," Haugen said in response to a question from the audience. "I think we could have eaten it for breakfast, lunch and supper. We also ate pike for first time."

Storms presented a slide show of the students' activities and their campsite and surroundings. "The scenery on the Kobuk River is very beautiful," she commented. "It was amazing to know that Onion Portage has been there for thousands of years and that people camped there. Just to be there and experience that was very humbling. Thank you for this opportunity." Onion Portage is a national historic landmark in the Kobuk Valley National Park.

Haugen presented letters to the working group from the four other Unalakleet high school students who learned how to collar caribou at Onion Portage—Alan Erickson, Taylor Harvey, Angel Nashalook and Lawrence Bradley.

Ryan Woodruff of Unalakleet helped chaperone the students.

Nanouk told The Nome Nugget that youths from Kobuk River villages and some Bering Strait villages had participated in the project in past years, but this was the first year for students from Unalakleet and Nome. She said the Bureau of Land Management provided funds for the project, and representatives of the National Park Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service participated in it

Alan Bittner, BLM's Anchorage field manager, told the working group that the agency plans to continue funding the project. He said BLM had found funding to bring all of the students who participated in this year's project to the working group meeting, but only two attended.

with ADF&G biologist Jim Dau, who has worked with the WAH herd for decades. He told the working group the bull:cow ratio has dropped slowly to the 40:100 level and may drop below that level this year or next year. He said calf survival has been going down slowly, and in the past 10 to 12 years, cow mortality has greatly exceeded calf survival. "We must see more calves live to reproductive age or the decline will continue," he added. Dau noted that killing a cow also kills her potential daughters and granddaughters.

Proposal 202 provides the following additional details about recent WAH harvests. "Results of community-based harvest surveys and statewide harvest reports estimate that approximately 14,000 caribou were harvested in each of the last two years, RY2012 and RY2013. Each year residents within the range of the herd took 95 percent of the harvest, of which 60 percent were bulls, 30 percent cows and 10 percent of unknown sex. Hunters residing outside the range of the herd, including non-residents, accounted for 5 percent of the harvest and took approximately 90 percent bulls, 9 percent cows and 1percent unknown sex. At these rates, harvests of the WAH cows have slightly exceeded the 2 percent sustainable harvest rate in each of the three years from RY2011 through RY2013, and harvests of bulls will likely exceed the 15 percent sustainable harvest rate within the next one to three years, RY2015 through RY2017.

"Based on population size and composition, the current WAH harvestable surplus is estimated at 13,100 caribou, approximately 7 percent less than the annual harvest in the last two years," the proposal notes. "If the decline remains consistent, the projected harvestable surplus for RY2015 is estimated at 11,300 caribou, approximately 20 percent lower than the total harvest during RY2012 and RY2013."

The board of Game has found that 8,000 to 12,000 caribou in the WAH and TCH herds combined is the amount reasonably necessary (ANS) for subsistence use, proposal 202 notes. The proposal warns that population trends in both herds suggest the combined harvestable surplus will be below the upper ANS threshold in the near future. "In the event that the harvestable surplus drops below the upper ANS level before the next Region V (Western and Arctic) board meeting, the department can close the non-resident season by emergency order," the proposal states.

Population decline factors

Dau said winter icing (rain on snow) events in the past decade may have started the WAH's decline. Caribou who can't reach lichen under snow starve to death. Dau suggested that predation by an increasing number of wolves and grizzlies within the WAH range is a significant cause of caribou mortality. "The predator mortality has been much bigger than non-predator mortality since 2003," he added.

"(The decline) doesn't seem to be range related," Dau said. "We know the winter range has changed, but the caribou are still fat." He said there is no evidence of chronic disease or parasite loads in the herd.

ADF&G biologists conduct an aerial photocensus of caribou herds every two years and estimate calf survival and cow mortality annually. The next photocensus is scheduled in 2015.

Proposal 202 discussed

ADF&G biologist Peter Bente of Nome, who serves the working group as agency representative, reviewed the hunting regulation changes in Proposal 202 as they apply to each game management unit within the ranges of the WAH and TCH. The group discussed the proposal at length, adopted a few recommendations for amendments and will forward them to the Board of Game for consideration. The deadline for submitting comments on Proposal 202 to the Board of Game is Feb. 27, 2015.

Proposal 202 is posted at www.adfg.alaska.gov under the heading "Additional proposals" to the 2014-2015 Board of Game Proposal Book.

Lower 48 Avian Flu discoveries unlikely to affect Alaska waterfowl hunters

(Juneau) - Avian influenza has been confirmed recently in wild birds in northwestern Washington and southwestern Oregon, but risks are negligible to waterfowl and waterfowl hunters in Alaska where hunting seasons remain open in some regions.
"This is primarily a waterfowl issue in Washington and Oregon, but can be a threat to domestic poultry," said Alaska Department of Fish and Game Wildlife Veterinarian Dr. Kimberlee Beckmen. "It's unlikely to pose any threat to Alaska's waterfowl populations and these strains have never been found to infect humans.

Two strains of highly pathogenic H5 virus - H5N2 and H5N8 - were found earlier this month in Whatcom County, Washington. The H5N2 strain was confirmed in a northern pintail duck, while the H5N8 virus was verified in a captive gyrfalcon that had been fed hunter-killed wild birds. In Winston, Oregon, the H5N8 avian influenza was identified in a small backyard poultry flock that had open access to a pond and marsh that wild waterfowl commonly use.

"The term 'highly pathogenic' means it is highly pathogenic to domestic poultry and says nothing about its potential impacts on wild birds or pets or humans," said Dr. Beckmen. Outbreaks of H5N8 have occurred in domestic fowl across Europe and Asia over the last year with no associated cases in humans.

Avian flu concerns have prompted increased surveillance of wild birds in Alaska in the past. Between 2006 and 2010, nearly 57,000 birds were tested for H5N1, and none tested positive for the virus. The Alaska Departments of Fish and Game, Environmental Conservation, and the U.S. Geological Survey are performing surveillance testing for avian in-

"Neither H5N2 nor H5N8 have been found in Alaska," said DEC State Veterinarian Dr. Bob Gerlach.

Alaska waterfowl hunting seasons remain open through December 31 in Southeast and through January 22, 2015, around Kodiak Island and the Aleutian Chain. While no public health concerns have been associated with either H5N2 cases serve as reminders that wildlife can carry pathogens of many kinds. As always, Alaska hunters should practice routine hygiene when handling, cleaning and cooking wild game. The Department of Fish and Game recommends the follow-

· Do not handle or eat obviously sick game.

• Wear rubber or disposable latex gloves while handling and cleaning

· Wash hands and thoroughly clean knives, equipment and surfaces that come into contact with game.

• Do not eat, drink or smoke while handling animals.

 All game should be thoroughly cooked (meat internal temperature of 165

Poultry owners can protect backyard flocks by taking measures to prevent them from interacting with wild birds. Neither H5N2 nor H5N8 have been found in any commercial poultry flocks.

Dead or sick domestic birds should be reported to the DEC at (907) 375-8215; for more information, contact Dr. Bob Gerlach bob.gerlach@alaska.gov in Anchorage at 375-8214. Dead or sick wild birds should be reported to ADF&G Wildlife Health and Disease Surveillance Program, phone: (907) 328-8354, email: dfg.dwc.vet@alaska.gov; or to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Avian Disease Hotline at 1-866-527-3358.

Kyle Robert Tundra George

Kyle Robert Tundra George was born on November 21, 1987 at Alaska Native Medical Center Anchorage to Larry George and Jeri Komonaseak. His dad, big brother Travis and big sister Maliya welcomed him home with loving arms. Our heavenly father called him home the early morning of November 12, 2014. Kyle spent his early years growing up in Akiachak, with his parents, siblings, great-uppa soi Joseph George, paternal grandparents Fred and Mary, numerous aunts, uncles, cousins and other family and friends. He was baptized by his late great uppa George Moses at the Akiachak Moravian church.

He attended Akiachak and Nome Elementary schools. No sooner did he begin his career at Nome-Beltz

Kyle Robert Tundra George

H.S. than Kyle dropped out of high school. He signed up at the Palmer Job Corps program and acquired his high school diploma and completed the carpentry program.

Kyle was a restless and freespirited individual. His relationship with Susie Nelson often found him flying on a jet plane on a whim's notice. He had the tendency to call home and say, "Hi mom, I'm here in Anchorage or Minnesota!" Suzanne Nelson and Kyle were blessed with their daughter Christina Mary George on August 26, 2006. Kyle cared for Christina and her older siblings Gabriel and Lily in Mankato, MN. He was a dedicated dad to his daughter and always kept her very close to his heart.

Kyle loved his nieces and nephews and children in general. Babies and little kids gravitated towards him. After his paternal grandparents died, Kyle often shared how his late Grandma Mary instilled in him the love for our Creator and often felt her presence during life's challenges.

Alongside his childhood buddies (brother) Trevor Lee, Darryl and DeShawn Williams, Ross Outwater and Peter Olanna, Kyle grew to love the sport of BMX-ing. One summer, he walked away unscathed from flipping his BMX bike near the KNOM radio station. That just made him that much more determined to get back on his bike. He also enjoyed snowboarding and riding a fast Ski-doo sled any day. Kyle enjoyed flying, had he remained in Mankato, MN he would say Ron would have taught me how to fly his single-engine airplane.

At a very early age Kyle was camping, fishing, gathering, and participating in subsistence activities up and down the Kuskokwim River. Kyle was eager to enjoy new adventures in the great outdoors. He was in his element learning new skills and blazing new trails. He purchased his first Ski-doo when he was 16. He pulled his step-dad Danno out of a crab-pot hole outside of Nome during one winter crabbing season at the age of 14. God showed him his strength that day!

Kyle shared stories with his family and friends of the time he killed his one and only polar bear near the Wales Kingikmiut School. He recently visited his grandma Maggie Komonaseak in Anchorage and said "Gram, maybe I will kill another polar bear! He had hopes to one day marry his sweetheart Jessie Ongtowasruk. He was also blessed to hunt on his uncle Luther Komonaseak's whaling crew.

Kyle is survived by his pride and joy, his only Panik Christina Mary George of Little Fork, MN, maternal grandmother Maggie Komonaseak of Anchorage, mother Jeri Komonaseak, father Larry George of Akiachak, step-dad Daniel Knudsen of Colorado, brother Travis George of Akiachak, Yvonne Renee' "Maliya" George of Wales, Jasmin George of Nome, and Karmen Tittle of Anchorage, Bernard and Yolanda

George of Tuntutuliak, numerous aunties, uncles, cousins from Akiachak, Wales, Nome, Brevig, Bethel, Anchorage and beyond, as well as his brother-from-another mother; Trevor Lee and "Mom" Katherine Lee of Nome.

He is preceded in death by his maternal grandfather Silas Komonaseak of Nome, his maternal great-grandparents Winton and Carrie Weyapuk of Wales; his paternal grandparents Frederick and Mary M. George of Akiachak; paternal great-grandfathers George Moses Sr. and Joseph K. George of Akiachak; great uncle George Moses Jr. of Akiachak, great aunties Ella Lathim and Ella Weyapuk of Wales, first cousins Rochelle Berry of Akiachak and Jeffrey W. Komonaseak of Wales, as well as numerous great-uncles and great aunties from the Bering Strait region and the Yukon-Kuskokwim delta.

God truly blessed Kyle Robert as a tenderhearted soul and a close friend to many!

More Letters

diting firm is now BDO. BDO is a huge organization. Check them out on the internet.

Each of the audit reports since the year 2000 includes a letter that states the scope of the audit and the auditor's opinion. It is important that the audit be conducted in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America and the standards applicable to financial audits contained In Government Auditing Standards, issued by the Comptroller General of the United States. Each of the letters written at the conclusion of their audit work contain their opinion. Of course NJUS wants an unqualified opinion. Here is what our auditors said in their letter included in their report for the year ended December 31, 2013. "We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our audit opinion.[...] In our opinion, the financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Nome Joint Utility System as of December 31, 2013 and 2012, and the changes in its financial position and its cash flows for the years then ended in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.'

This opinion is considered to be an unqualified, no exceptions, opinion. Each of the audit reports for the years 2000 through 2013 contain the auditor's letter with an unqualified opinion. The accounting staff, the CFO, the General Manager and the Board of Directors are proud of these results.

In connection with the audit, the auditors perform a close review of the records related to federal grants. The auditors put comments in the Single Audit Section about this and that. They might see an accounting routine that could be improved. NJUS must reply to their comments and describe a course of corrective action. These comments have not caused our auditors to qualify their opinion. The comments are really helpful hints for NJUS to improve accounting procedures. We always welcome the hints so that we can take action to become the best.

NJUS uses software provided by Professional Computer Systems, a company located in Denison, Iowa. PCS is one of the best and serves about 100 utilities across the United States. Check them out on the internet. We use Utilit-e Insight for general accounting and Utilit-e Connect for customer billing and in-

I assisted with the installation or our software for accounting and it is fantastic, second to none. John is the man in charge of the software for customer billing and information. I would not trade our software for any other.

So we have a cash shortfall today as a result of an aggressive approach to utility system improvements. I expect that the City and NJUS will work through this problem as a team. NJUS is a part of the City. We are partners.

Be thankful that when you flip the switch your lights come on. It is big business to keep the power flowing. When you turn on the faucet you expect clear and safe water. Flush your toilet and see what happens in Nome. You have it good here. Say thank you to John and the Utility Board and encourage them to work through this current problem.

LEGAL NOTICE: NOAA Fisheries Proposes to Designate Critical Habitat for Ringed Seals

NOAA's National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) is proposing to designate critical habitat for the Arctic ringed seal, which is listed as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). The proposed critical habitat in the northern Bering, Chukchi, and Beaufort seas provides sea ice conditions that are essential for ringed seal pupping, nursing, basking, and molting. Primary prey resources to support ringed seals also occur within the proposed critical habitat area. The primary consequence of critical seals also occur within the proposed critical habitat area. The primary consequence of critical habitat designation is that federal agencies are required to consult with NMFS on actions they authorize, fund, or carry out that may affect critical habitat to ensure their actions do not destroy or adversely modify critical habitat. NMFS is acception accompanion of the prepared degistrations. cepting comments on the proposed designation during a formal public comment period, and will announce public hearings on the proposed designation in the near future. You may submit written comments on the proposal, identified by Docket Number NOAA-NMFS-2013-0114, by either of the following methods: (1) Electropolity. ## Charlie Brown would have been proud

By Nancy McGuire

The holidays are here and it's time to share Christmas wishes and

The tales of Nomeites getting their precious Christmas trees from Council in the days before air freight and snowmachines hits the old memory button to rewind back to the old days when I grew up in rural Pennsylvania when we'd cut our own tree.

We had a patch of blue spruce trees way at the top of the hill behind our house. Our dad grew Christmas trees for fun, family and friends. My brother Bob and I would trek to the top of the hill with our dad and a saw.

We'd spend about an hour selecting a tree. Our dad was quite particular about his trees. Some blue spruce were deeper blue than others. Some had bare spots where they were too close and needed culled. Some grew on a steep slope and had crooked stumps. Some were brown on

We never got the perfectly shaped straight tree. We'd proudly select the tree with a brown side, a crooked stump and the most pathetic in the patch. It would be escorted down the hill and into our garage where dad would make a Borax fire retardant concoction and spray in on the tree. We'd take it upstairs and prop it up as straight as we could with the bare side against the wall.

We'd decorate it in the evening and by magic it would become the most beautiful Christmas tree on Denny Road.

It's with this fond memory that I hope all our readers have a happy and merry Christmas.

King Island Native Community Annual Meeting and Election

Iditarod names honorary musher

The Iditarod Trail Committee announced last week that long-term Iditarod volunteer Philip Esai has been named the 2015 Honorary musher. Each year the board of directors of the Iditarod Trail Committee has honored one or more people who have made a significant contribution to the sport of sled dog racing.

Philip and his wife Dora have participated in every Iditarod race as volunteers since the beginning. The Athabaskan Indian couple would house mushers in the early years of the race at their cabin along the banks of the Kuskokwim River at IDITAROD— The Iditarod Trail Committee announced that Philip Esai was named Honorary Musher for the 2015 Iditarod.

Big River, located half way to Mc-Grath from Nikolai. Their daughter Marty remembers, "There was no room in the cabin because mushers were sleeping everywhere.'

The Esai family would cook pots of moose stew, moose steaks, beaver and the occasional lynx fry. The coffee pot was always on for anyone traveling the trail, not just the mushers. Philip also greeted, fed and housed 50 mushers for several years at the Runkles bison camp located along the Farewell Burn Trail in the Peloc Hills 40 miles out of Nikolai. More recently, Philip and Dora set up a 12 x 14 wall tent complete with a wood-burning stove and spruce bough floor for mushers to sleep in at the Nikolai checkpoint.

Philip was a hard working volunteer who worked on the original trail from Rohn towards McGrath. Most recently, at age 72, Philip helped with re-opening 28 miles of trail destroyed during the Turquoise Lake Fire in the Farewell Burn. He was instrumental in locating the original trail and helping to chain saw, move trees and brush, all during average temperatures between -25°F and -30°F each day.

Philip had also gone out on the trail over the years in search of lost mushers and lost dogs. He regularly volunteered as a checker and once stayed up for 48 hours to make sure his duties were complete. Philip loved the race and the trail and would do anything to help the Iditarod succeed. He was a dog musher from his early childhood and felt a special connection to the dogs and the mushers.

Philip died May 21, 2014.

The Iditarod will get underway at 10:00 a.m. on Saturday, March 7, 2015 in downtown Anchorage with a representative from the Esai family wearing honorary #1 bib and riding in the sled basket of the first musher to leave the start line.
